Driver Points 'Invalid'

British Columbia's demerit point system for drivers convicted under the Motor Vehicle Act has been ruled unconstitutional by a Vancouver judge.

In dismissing a speeding charge against a University of B.C. student Tuesday in provincial court Judge Douglas Hume ruled the demerit point system is "unconstitutional, vague and discriminatory."

He said the law is unconstitutional because it doesn't allow for equal treatment of all persons accused, and it is vague because it doesn't say how or when points can be removed from a driver's record.

Informed of the ruling Attorney-General Alex Macdonald expressed concern, and said he may make a statement on the judge's action later today.

Under the system introduced in October, 1968, a driver accumulates demerits for each traffic violation and his record is stored on magnetic tape. He gets a warning letter when the total reaches six demerits.

At nine demerits the computer in the motor vehicle branch automatically kicks out the record and the branch gives the offending driver an opportunity to show just cause why his licence should not be suspended for 30 days.

B.C. Tel Set To Battle Takeover

B.C. Tel president J. Ernest Richardson Tuesday assured shareholders the company will fight to protect their interests in the event of a takeover bid by the provincial government.

At the same tiime he released figures showing net earnings for the months ended Sept. 30 were $14.5 million, up 31 per cent from the same period in 1971.

Earnings per share are $4.62 compared with $3.52 in the same period last year.

Richardson said the company is incorporated by a special act of Parliament and "it follows, therefore, that only the Parliament at Ottawa can legislate as to the acquisition of its assets or preferred or ordinary shares."

He added: "Shareholders should have confidence that we will take every step necessary to protect their interests."

On Oct. 12 Premier Barrett repeated his campaign pledge to take over the telephone company but did not say when it would be done.

Operating revenues for the nine months were $168 million while operating expenses were $117 million. New earnings totalled $14,961,0000 compared with $10,139,000 in 1971.

Return on invested capital is 5.86 per cent compared with 5.25 per cent in 1971.

Of the $4.62 per share earnings, 36 cents per share was attributed to temporary income tax deductions.

Aussies Kill First Hijacker

ADELAIDE, Australia (UPI) — Police today shot and killed an airline hijacker who commandeered an Ansett Airlines Fokker Friendship plane carrying 36 persons and a crew of four in Australia's first hijacking incident.

Police said the hijacker died of his wounds at a hospital following a shootout at Alice Springs airport. They said a police constable who was wounded in the gunfight remained in serious condition.

Police said the hijacker, who remained unidentified, was gunned down after he opened fire on three policemen.

An airline stewardess held hostage by the man broke away just before the shooting erupted, police said.

A spokesman for Ansett Airlines said the man, armed with a sawed-off .22 calibre rifle, entered the flight deck as the plane made its final approach to Alice Springs airport from Adelaide.

The man pointed the rifle at Capt. Ralph Young and Co-Pilot Walter Gowans and told them to call the Alice Springs control tower, the airline said.

Then, the airline said, he told the pilots he wanted a light aircraft and a parachute ready for him when the aircraft landed. He made no other demands, the spokesman said.

Shortly after the F27 touched down, the man allowed all the women passengers and one stewardess to disembark but kept one stewardess, the two pilots and 12 male passengers aboard.

During a series of conversations with officials and police, the airline said, the man told them he wanted a plane to fly him to a remote point about 300 miles west of Alice Springs.

The aircraft taxied around the Alice Springs runway for nearly two hours as the man argued with police.

As the hijacker walked to the light plane, with his rifle trained on one of the stewardesses, he was jumped by a plainclothes detective who knocked the rifle from his hands, authorities said. The man broke away from the policeman and ran into the bush on the side of the runway.

But police quickly surrounded the man, described by one of the passengers as a "European aged about 35," and arrested him after a brief scuffle.

Hydro Men Back to Work

Times News Services

MONTREAL—Striking Hydro-Quebec workers began to filter back to work today 90 minutes after the provincial legislature passed emergency legislation ordering the strikers to maintain essential services.

But thousands of people are still without power in the wake of the nine-day walkout by 8,500 hydro employees.

Under the terms of the crisis legislation, the strikers have been told to maintain essential services or face stiff fines.

About 29,000 people in the province were without power Tuesday and some firms, crimped by blackouts, were laying off employees.

One hydro spokesman said there seemed to be no problem with the return to work.

"The union seems to be calling all their people in.

"I can't tell you how many people will return to work.

"It's hard to predict across the province but we think most of our personnel here in Montreal will be on the job."

He said repair crews headed out to fix major power breaks across the province as soon as Hydro-Quebec officials called them and informed them of the legislation.

"I have not heard of any trouble and we really aren't anticipating any," he added.

The strike had forced many frustrated Montrealers either to leave their homes, rent electrical generators or just put up with the lack of electricity.

With routine power breakdowns cutting electricity for periods of more than a week, problems have ranged from invalids being trapped inside their apartments to supplies of frozen goods being ruined.

Hydro-Quebec says up to 160,000 Montrealers have been affected by the strike at various times.

In suburban Cote St. Luc where about 4,000 residents were blacked out since within minutes of the Hydro workers' walkout until 8 o'clock this morning — the usual neighborhood sounds have been augmented by the whirr of auxiliary generators.

Many other residents of the relatively affluent suburb have deserted their homes to take refuge in nearby hotels or the homes of friends.

TANKER SINKS SHIP

ATHENS (AP) — A giant Greek oil tanker, on a trial run without cargo, and a Greek Navy froop ship collided today in the Saronic Gulf. The navy ship sank and shipping sources said 46 sailors were missing. Thirteen others were rescued.

The tanker was identified as the 100,175-ton World Hero, owned by Greek shipping magnate Stavros Niarchos. The military vessel was reported to be the Merlin.

There were no reports of casualties on the tanker.

The World Hero, built in 1970 in Japan, is described in the Greek shipping directory as the biggest of Niarchos' fleet of 80 ships.

The collision occured in clear weather. The sea was calm.

Storms Batter East

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Heavy snow, freezing rain and drifting snow tormented areas from the Ohio Valley to New England today and gale warnings continued for much of the Atlantic Coast.

Strong winds lashed the lower Great Lakes and the North Atlantic coast. The New England storm moved toward Nova Scotia after leaving up to a foot of snow in some northern states.

The powerful, far-reaching storm has been blamed for at least 19 deaths since Monday as it moved toward the Atlantic. At least three other persons died in weather-related incidents in other sections of the United States.

Meanwhile, flood victims started returning to their water-soaked homes in Michigan and Ohio in the wake of a storm which lashed the shorelines of Lakes Erie, Huron and St. Clair on Tuesday.

Authorities estimated the number of evacuees at more than 10,000 along a 200-mile stretch of Lake Erie and Lake Huron—shoreline extending from Ohio's Cuyahoga County west to Toledo and north to Michigan's Saginaw Bay.

In some areas curfews were in effect and National Guard troops were on duty to prevent looting.

Winds to 45 miles an hour sent waves up to 15 feet high crashing against Michigan and Ohio lakefront areas.

Gale warnings were posted today from Eastport, Me., to New Jersey, with small-craft warnings flying as far south as Savannah, Ga. Gale warnings were also up along Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

SPEC URGES AUTO CURBS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society says 67 per cent of oil pollution in the oceans comes from waste automotive and industrial lubricating oil.

The Vancouver organization, in a report funded by a federal local initiatives grant, recommends curbing automotive oil pollution by building rapid transit systems in all metropolitan areas and banning all but commercial vehicles from the downtown core of cities.

Canadian Union Gets $30,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Ironworkers Union, Local 1, was awarded $30,000 damages against the International Ironworkers Union Tuesday for what British Columbia Supreme Court Justice F. C. Munroe described as "outrageous conduct" in putting the fledgling Canadian union out of business.

The Canadian union was formed in 1960 by a group who broke away from the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Ironworkers Union, Local 97.

The litigation began in 1966 when the Canadian union sued the international for damages for alleged unlawful interference.

The Canadian union lost but took its case on to the B.C. Court of Appeal.

There it won and the issue was sent back to B.C. Supreme Court for a hearing on the amount of damages to be awared.

Mr. Justice Munroe in his decision to assess the international union referred to an agreement made in July, 1966 between Amalgamated Construction Association—a group representing contractors—and the international union.

"Under that agreement, in order to end an illegal strike, and illegal picketing, members of the construction association agreed (with the international union) under coersion and intimidation that they would not in future let out contracts or entertain bids from subcontractors who had entered into collective agreement with the plaintiff (the Canadian union) the certified bargaining agent for their ironworker employees," said the judge.

He said the Building Trades Council, representing con-

Heaviest Strikes Against North

Times News Services

SAIGON — The U.S. Command today reported the heaviest air strikes against North Vietnam since President Nixon cut back the air war nearly a month ago.

The B-52 raids were also the deepest into North Vietnam since last spring, the bombers striking within 20 miles of the 20th parallel limit set by Nixon to keep the bombing away from Hanoi and Haiphong during ceasefire negotiations. The parallel runs 65 miles south of Hanoi and Haiphong.

The 340 total was a record since the air war was restricted on Oct. 23. The previous high was Oct. 15 when a total of about 365 sorties were flown (a sortie is one flight by one plane). But no restrictions were on at that time.

As the latest strikes were announced, North Vietnam accused the United States of "carpet bombing" raids earlier this week that caused "many casualities to the civilian population."

U.S. Navy pilots used "wall-eye" radar-guided bombs to destroy three bridges near Vinh, 164 miles south of Hanoi, U.S. spokesmen said. The avowed aim of the bombing, as it has been since the air war resumed April 6, was to choke off North Vietnamese supplies flowing south.

The Things Travellers Carry . . .

LONDON (UPI) — Aerospace Minister Michael Heseltine told a pilots' meeting Tuesday that between July and October, British Overseas Airways Corp. staff members at London Airport found and took from passengers through anti-hijacking measures:

—19 revolvers, pistols, shotguns and rifles.

—More than 300 rounds of ammunition.

—One camel whip.

They also discovered 160 antique, replica or toy guns, he added.

BOYS WERE BOMBS

BELFAST (CP) — British soldiers stopped two boys for questioning in West Belfast today and found themselves talking to two "human bombs."

The boys, 15 and 16, were carrying 4½ pounds of gelignite, a detonator and fuses.

They were handed over to police. Earlier, a loaded pistol and 150 rounds of ammunition were found in a school in the city's Roman Catholic Falls Road area.

Warden: Let Some Drugs Into Jails

CALGARY (CP) — Society must run the risk of allowing some soft drugs to infiltrate its prisons if it wants to retain a humane penal system, says warden Pierre Jutras of the Drumheller correctional institute.

The warden, commenting on the possibility of drug abuse within institutions, said: "We are very concerned but the only way to stop it completely would be to keep the prisoners locked up for 24 hours a day with no visitors.

"When society as a whole has this problem with drugs it is bound to be reflected in our institutions, especially since more and more people are coming to prison for drug offences."

However, warden James Jackson of the Calgary correctional institute says he can't point to specific incidents of drug abuse at his institution, although he has his suspicions.

"We search the clothing of prisoners coming back from temporary absences and we warn visitors that they must not bring anything in, although we don't search them as a matter of course.

"And if we have reason to believe a person will attempt to bring in contraband we don't grant them permission to visit."

But one former prisoner, who declined to reveal his name, said he thought he wouldn't see another "joint" when he went to jail for the first time in 1966 for possession of marijuana, a four-month term at the Oakalla Prison in British Columbia.

"At Oakalla you could get anything you wanted — heroin, marijuana, hashish, LSD, MDA, anything," he said in a recent interview.

Later, he said, drug convictions resulting in a total of 31 months at Fort Saskatchewan jail and Drumheller showed Alberta's institutions shared much the same problem.

Hard drugs like heroin are rarely available, he said, "but a guy with a soft drug habit would not have to give it up because he's going to jail.

"In fact, I would say it is easy to get soft drugs like marijuana, LSD or prescription pills."

He added:

"Jail is a very boring place. You're in a state of depression all the time and drugs are a way of getting away from it all — they're a break, a holiday.

"There is a drug culture in jail — the so-called hippie-types who used drugs on the outside. They number about 20 to 30 per cent of the inmates usually. But about 80 per cent use drugs at some time during their stay no matter what they were like on the outside.

Warden Jutras said he has had about 12 cases in the last year of persons being caught possessing drugs within the institution or trying to bring them in from outside.

The contraband has always been of the "soft" kind, he said, including illegally-obtained prescription sedatives like librium as well as LSD and hashish.

"To say there is no problem is naive," he said.

Showdown Ahead?

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — The Peronist-dominated General Labor Confederation said today it is declaring a general strike Friday so workers can welcome former dictator Juan D. Peron home after his 17-year exile. The governing military junta earlier banned all public demonstrations until further notice, thus setting the stage for a possible showdown between troops and strikers.

Flight Cancelled

MONTREAL (CP) — A strike by about 240 Nordair Ltd. employees in Quebec, Ontario and the Northwest Territories forced the airline to cancel at least one of its 30 scheduled flights today, a Nordair spokesman said.

Lofty Blaze

CHICAGO (UPI) — A spectacular fire raced through the 95th, 96th and 97th floors of the John Hancock Centre today, damaging a restaurant and forcing about 50 residents to seek the safety of lower floors. Fire Commissioner John Quinn said nobody was injured and that the fire was put out in an hour.

Cut Off With a Shilling, Blonde in Chips

LONDON (AP) — A jury ruled Tuesday that a will leaving blonde model Penny Brahms a shilling — about 12 cents — and four nude photographs of herself was a forgery.

Miss Brahms, 21, now stands to inherit about $1.2 million from her late husband, property magnate Clive Raphael. The prosecutor said during the trial that the money would go to her if the will was invalidated.

The contested will, written on the back of an envelope, was dated two days before Raphael died last year in a plane crash in France.

At the time Raphael had accused Miss Brahms of adultery with several men, and divorce proceedings were pending. The nude photographs mentioned in the disputed will were alleged to have been taken by her lovers.

The jury brought in guilty verdicts against Shelash MacIntosh, 22, a teacher, and Eric Alba-Teran, a 51-year-old Mexican banker, for conspiring with lawyer Ronald Shulman on the forged will.

The prosecutor said Shulman, who fled to South America, organized the scheme and Miss MacIntosh was his mistress.

Miss Brahms, a former beauty queen who claimed she was distantly related to the composer, has led a highly publicized life. Her mother went bankrupt paying her drama school and clothing fees.

Since his death she has married Michael Caborn-Waterfield, 40, known as "Dandy Kim" who financed a string of shops in Britain selling sexual aids.

struction unions, "offered the gratuitous and worthless legal advice" that the agreement should be carried out by contractors going out of business and starting up again—under different names—employing members of the international union instead of the Canadian union.

He held that the Canadian union "being forced out of business as a trade union by the illegal acts of the international union" lost its right to exist as a trade union and thus to act as an alternative bargaining agent on behalf of ironworkers.

"On the other hand, the defendant (the international) made substantial monetary gains by its illegal acts in its relentless struggle to put its rival out of business."

B.C. Tel: Set for Takeover Fight

The company' capital expenditreus for the period were $87.4 million, up from $82.8 million in the same time last year. The company has successfully completed a deal for $60 million in new financing.

In the third quarter of this year revenue was $58.7 million, net earnings totalled $6 million and per share earnings were $1.88.

This compares with third quarter performance in 1971 of $51.9 million revenue, $4.8 million earnings and per share earnings of $1.70.

Major shareholder of B.C. Tel is Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company of Montreal which holds 50.69 per cent of the shares issued and outstanding.

Since 1955 Anglo-Canadian has been controlled by the American firm General Telephone and Electronics Corporation which holds 83.28 per cent of its shares.

Through its holdings in Anglo-Canadian, the U.S. parent firm also owns Dominion Directory Ltd. which prints telephone directories for B.C. Tel and Canadian Telephones and Supplies Ltd. which does installation work under contract to B.C. Tel.

Besides American control, B.C. Tel also has American customers.

B.C. Tel owns telephone lines into Point Roberts where it services 400 subscribers on a 50-year franchise. The franchise is new, having more than 49 years to run.

The international service could complicate negotiations for a takeover.

Another complicating factor is the interprovincial service in the Peace River area.

B.C. Tel services 50 customers in Alberta and owns a plant on Alberta territory.

As plants go, it is not an impressive structure—it is a trailer-type building housing equipment—but it emphasizes the extraprovincial nature of the company.

The Alberta customers have been serviced by B.C. Tel since 1961 when the North-West Telephone Company, which served the Peace River area, was amalgamted with B.C. Tel.

said the Cote St. Luc break and other residential power failures were not important enough to merit emergency repairs by a union crew.

Some residential repairs had been made by supervisory personnel in cases where they have the equipment or specific training required.

But not everyone has another place to go to.

Three Cote St. Luc residents, a middle-aged couple and their daughter, stood talking outside their house.

"It's colder in the house than outside," the girl said.

"The concrete is still damp and it's so cold in there."

Her mother said they could not afford to go to a hotel and had no relatives nearby.

"The first day at a friend's house, you're company. The second day, you're family. The third day, you're just a pain.

"We refuse to be a burden. The family remains at home during the night but moves to the downtown YMCA during the day to stay warm.

"To sleep, I wear three sweaters to bed," the girl said. "A pair of socks, too. We make breakfast on a camping stove."

Policemen Killed

KENNETT SQUARE, Pa. (AP) — Two policemen were shot in the back and killed early today in the parking lot behind police headquarters in this Philadelphia suburb, police said.

The men were found on top of one another in a pool of blood next to their patrol car shortly before 3 a.m. after they failed to answer a call on the police radio.

Millstream Dump Battle Continues

The battle continues at Millstream landfill fire and Langford Fire Chief Allan LeQuesne says it will be two more weeks before the smouldering dump is extinguished.

LeQuesne had originally predicted an end to the Pollution Control Branch project by Oct. 31 but the operation has been plagued by a number of setbacks in the form of "hot spots" (large pockets of combustible materials, which burst into flames when uncovered by workers).

The fire chief said he and eight other workers, who have been working for over two months, have extinguished all but one patch, about 100 feet in diameter.

He said the refuse is still smouldering as deep as 40 feet in that spot and large pieces of logs and stumps were being uncovered.

Pollution Control Branch officials confirmed today they would keep financing the project until the fire is out, although they admitted they had not expected the operation to take so long to complete.

"It's been costly," PCB coordinator Allan Chmelauskas said, "but we've learned a great deal from a research standpoint."

Warden Backs Jail Dope

"Two months ago an officer found two visitors dropping hashish on the ground."

To control trafficking, he said, prisoners and vistors suspected of carrying drugs at Drumheller are searched and any prisoner found possessing drugs illegally is transferred to a maximum security penitentiary.

"It's almost impossible to stop it. People make drops all over the place — even throwing it over the walls in rubber balls . . ."

J. D. Lee, Alberta's director of institutions, said there is no possibility of getting drugs from within an institution because drugs given prisoners for medical reasons must be taken under supervision.

"We could get prescription pills, painkillers mostly, from the prison doctor by saying we had a backache or something," said the man who recently served a brief sentence for theft.

"We'd make it look like we were swallowing and then later we'd trade them off for tattoos, tobacco — things like that.

"You can go to the doctor in the morning and at night, so I was able to get two pills a day.

"The best way to get it is to have friends drop it off on the grounds somewhere. Then a whole gang of guys can go out and while the others gather around, one guy can ease down, pick it up and put it in his pocket."

the weather

Little change will occur in the weather pattern over the province during the next 48 hours. A slow moving upper disturbance across southeastern B.C. will produce periods of rain or wet snow in the Kootenay district. Inland areas will remain cloudy. Coastal districts will be generally clear today and Thursday but patchy cloud will persist over northern coastal areas.

Mercury Comet can handle it.

The rush hours. The freeways. The parking.
And do it all with economy.

There's no tougher test for a car than the big city. And Mercury Comet can handle it.

It's built to be easy to handle and maneuverable in heavy traffic. And to slip into parking spaces that many other cars have to pass up.

'JUNKIE NATION' SEEN AS TV VICTIM

WASHINGTON — Nicholas Johnson, maverick member of the U.S. Federal Communications Commission, said Tuesday that televison has become "the principal pusher to a junkie nation."

Testifying at the first session of drug advertising hearings held by the National Council of Churches, Johnson said Americans are spending at least $2 billion dollars a year "on our drug habit" as a result of media ads for sleep aids, cough remedies, obesity control drugs, mouthwashes and stimulants.

"The unfortunate fact is that we are unable to perceive our own drug problem precisely because we have reserved the moral disapprobation associated with the term "junkie" for those persons who are using drugs which our society has labeled "illegal," Johnson said.

The council said it is holding three days of drug hearings because "concerns of the religious community . . . include the effects of drug advertising."

Although "drugs have an indispensable place in mankind's fight against disease and pain," the council said, "we are also aware of how widely drugs are misused to the detriment of health and social functioning."

Citing statistics that show there are 24 times more alcoholics than heroin addicts, Johnson complained that on television "beer and wine are pushed openly and hard.

"While little kids are being told the lie that strength comes from sugar and cereal flakes . . . . their teenage brothers and sisters are being told the lie that beer will give them 'gusto' as well as sexuality, acceptability and all the material things in life for which they yearn," he said.

As more subtle ways in which alcohol is pushed, Johnson said, "drunks are frequently portrayed as comedy characters . . . story lines of programs often include someone with a problem turning, almost casually, to a drink of alcohol as a solution."

Johnson said cigarette advertisers have circumvented the cigarette advertising ban "by advertising a new product that looks like a cigarette but is called a cigar."

Attacking federal regulatory agencies, including the FCC, for "doing little or nothing" to restrict advertising, Johnson said drug reliance could be stemmed if there was a ban on all broadcast advertising of over-the-counter drugs, especially analgesics and mood-altering drugs.

He said programs viewed by large numbers of children should be free of product advertising altogether.

If such regulations cannot be established, Johnson said, "we could at least extend the fairness doctrine so that product advertising would be rebutted by a counter-ads" showing the adverse consequences of using the product.

Wage, Price Curbs Viewed Unlikely

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — There is little or no enthusiasm within the federal cabinet for wage and price controls at this time, government sources said today.

Wage and price controls are not regarded as the answer to Canada's problems and consequently the contingency plans for such a program will remain on the shelf, they said.

Finance Minister John Turner is expected to take the lead this week in explaining why the federal government wants no part at this point in time of a costly and complicated freeze program such as the United States and United Kingdom have in operation.

Facing the uncertainties involved in a minority government situation and the added complications of operating such a program in a federal state, the cabinet is going along with the advice of its key economic government personnel.

The word is being quietly passed around Parliament Hill that controls are not the answer for inflation in Canada at this time.

The Canadian government feels that the inflationary situation in this country is not as desperate as some people would appear to believe.

It is admitted that the U.S. has a slightly better record than Canada on consumer prices since imposing controls.

In the U.S., consumer prices have increased 3.3 per cent as against 5.3 per cent in Canada.

However, in the United Kingdom consumer prices in September were up seven per cent compared to Canada's 5.3 per cent increase.

On food alone in Canada the index was up 9.7 per cent in September compared to 4.8 per cent in the United States.

This compared to a rise of 9.1 per cent in August for the U.K. The September U.K. figure is not available.

When all commodities, excluding food, are considered the Canadian consumer price rate has an excellent record.

In September it was up only 2.2 per cent in Canada compared to 2.5 per cent in the United States and 5.0 per cent in the United Kingdom.

What has disturbed the government in this country is the pressure building up in the press for the imposition of wage and price controls.

The Canadian government, if it ever came to decide that controls were the answer, would have to go into such a program over the opposition of organized labor.

There is also the constitutional barrier which could pose a problem and the approval of all provinces likely would be involved.

In addition a minority government seeking to introduce such a program runs grave risks of precipitating its defeat in the Commons.

Faced with these difficulties the cabinet has no great desire to launch such a program, particularly when it is far from convinced such a program is required at the present time.

Inflation in Canada, aside from the rise in food prices, is regarded as reasonably under control and within tolerable limits, consequently the word from government sources is don't expect the government to move into controls now or in the near future.

PC Caucus Plots Killer Strategy

OTTAWA (CP) — The Conservatives began their first post-election caucus today to discuss forthcoming Parliamentary strategy and introduce 54 new members to the life of an MP.

The 108-member caucus was to devote most of today's session to looking back over the recent general election campaign and telling the new MPs about facilities here, about Parliamentary procedures and conduct in the House.

Thursday, the caucus was to discuss strategy for the next Parliament.

As he entered the meeting, party leader Robert Stanfield repeated earlier statements that "this government has no mandate."

"Therefore, we're certainly not going to try to keep them alive.

"We're not going to support proposals we don't think deserve support and we're not going to vote against measures we think deserve support. . . . We think our credibility is very important."

WORE NAME TAGS

With so many new members in the caucus, all wore name tags.

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker, who seldom attended caucus in the last Parliament, was there today and he predicted that Prime Minister Trudeau and New Democratic Leader David Lewis would make some "arrangement" to keep the Liberal government in power.

A few minutes later, Mr. Stanfield told reporters that he didn't know to what extent the NDP would support the government.

The caucus was to begin with an introduction of new members, a welcome by Mr. Stanfield and a campaign report from national organizer Finlay MacDonald.

After a lunch break there would be a special afternoon session for new members, headed by party whip Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster).

Thursday's discussions on strategy is scheduled to begin at 10 a.m.

Mother Killed

LONDON (Reuter) — A man whose mother opposed his plans to marry was sentenced Monday to six years in prison for strangling her just before his wedding. Richard Wilde, 22, was convicted of manslaughter. The court was told that on the morning of his marriage Wilde argued with his 61-year-old mother, hit her on the head with a frying pan, strangled her with a necktie, then put her body in a spare room and went off for the wedding.

Where Looks Count

Alderman Michael Young is to be commended for pushing the proposal to establish a design panel in Victoria, so that Council could be advised on acceptable design and appearance for new building projects. No city needs such a device more than Victoria, where some once attractive neighborhoods have been sacrificed to mediocrity through construction which conforms to fire regulations or sanitary requirements but does nothing for the visible environment.

This has been true particularly of apartment buildings, since the ubiquitous box-form is apparently the least expensive type of construction. But a proliferation of unattractive living quarters can be expensive for a neighborhood and eventually for a whole community. A community should therefore have some powers of supervision and control over appearance. There should be conformity with a reasonable standard of architectural worth. This the proposed advisory body could help to achieve.

Under Alderman Young's plan the design panel would advise on development proposals over $100,000 in cost. That at least would be a good start. His further suggestion, that building permits for projects over $50,000 in value should be issued only when accompanied by the certification of an architect could do much to raise the standards of construction throughout the city.

Mr. Young mentions duplication of plans as one hazard in neighborhood development. The incredible row of look-alikes to be seen in North Saanich near Macdonald Park provides an example of what can happen in dwelling construction when the overall appearance of the whole area is given little consideration. Variety and attractiveness can be achieved at the cost, in many cases, of imagination. There are many excellent local examples of this.

It is not yet too late to rescue Victoria from esthetically uncontrolled construction, although some areas of the city will be considered backward for many years to come. City council is at last taking steps to do something effective about the problem. The measures proposed — if passed by the council — will not provide complete answers to the situation, but they will be a welcome step in the right direction.

Private investment in revenue-producing properties should not be at the expense of the neighborhood or the community as a whole — particularly when the majority of objectionable features can be so easily avoided.

Interim Policy

In his remarks in Vancouver recently Lt.-Gen. E. L. M. Burns spoke of the need for Canada to avoid sponging on the U.S. for defence needs. He said: "I believe that if we want to be respected by the Americans, and to respect ourselves, we should continue to carry a fair part of the load until the day when the nations have become reasonable enough to carry out the general disarmament they all voted for in principle in the United Nations."

As a short statement of what Canadian defence policy should be, Gen. Burns' summary could not be more to the point. There is no denying our geographic links to the American position, or our need to avoid the loss of sovereignty which military dependence could create.

The concept of a "fair part of the load" is open to debate in detail but there should be no doubt that our national interest focuses on the day when the nations become "reasonable" enough to forgo force to defend national interests. Gen. Burns' approach itself reflects the rationalism which the Canadian environment engenders in its statesmen.

". . . but listen, Pierre . . . on the other hand, Lewis never said he was NOT gonna play ball . . ."

Just Get Used to Them?

On October 10, without warning, a 16-inch oil pipe of the Texas-New Mexico Pipeline Company cracked on the Navajo Indian reservation near Ship Rock, New Mexico, spilling 900 barrels of heating oil into an irrigation ditch leading to the San Juan River. The spill moved downstream through canyon walls and made its way toward Lake Powell. There combined agencies worked to contain the slick and remove it, along with debris which formed an accidental block to its passage.

According to authorities, it "couldn't have happened at a worse time or in worse circumstances," though loss of wildlife is reportedly minimal. The experience, a first for the Environmental Protection Agency, brought the EPA warm praise for its defensive efforts. But with that praise are assessments that can only dismay regions through which oil is now moved or will be moved in the future.

The region in which the spill occurred is reportedly "leak-prone" and, says one report, "the chances of spill, leak, accident and slick are something the states have learned to live with."

EPA officials, looking ahead to two or three more months to get the clean-up job completed, say they don't know how occasional spills of this kind can be prevented.

The comments should be noted by Canadians in their deep anxiety over the prospect of spills as tanker-borne oil moves up the Strait of Juan de Fuca — or, alternatively, makes its way to refineries or markets by pipeline.

The spill in New Mexico may be only of academic interest to Canadians. But the attitude adopted toward it by persons involved is something else. Do we just reconcile ourselves to the prospect of future spills and hope that techniques which do not yet exist will eliminate the damage they cause?

DAVID HUMPHREYS

Heath's Freeze—Will It Work?

LONDON — Will it work? This will be the acid test for what the British government chooses to call "a standstill" for possibly nearly six months on prices, wages, dividends and rents. It could not be styled a freeze, which it is, because that was what the Labor government introduced. Anything reminiscent of Labor rule is shunned like the plague. Official estimates that it will take nearly a month to put legislation through Parliament did not dampen enthusiasm for attempting to enforce the standstill immediately. Yet it runs for 90 days from the time of royal assent, making about 120 days: then the draft legislation includes a clause for a further 60-day extension. Britain could be freezing until April. Certainly present talk about it missing the inflationary claims due from the miners and Ford workers in February is optimistic.

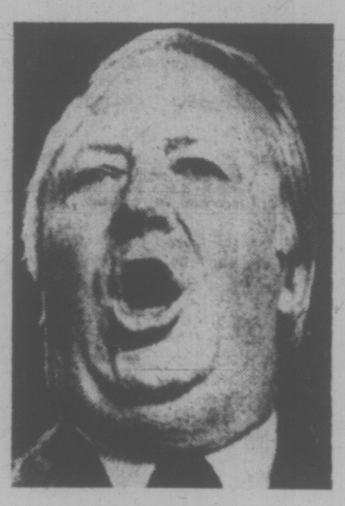
Key Factors

The attitude of the major unions is one of the key factors in the standstill's success. The others are the efficacy of machinery for controlling prices — and here the initial omens are not good — and the effect of the thaw. Prime Minister Edward Heath's oft-stated opposition to a statutory policy was that after it ended pent-up demand would wipe out gains. Former Labor chancellor of the exchequer Roy Jenkins, now a backbencher, delivered a stinging reference to this in the Commons. "Does the prime minister regard the short-term situation that he has produced as so disastrous that he cannot bear to think about the long terms?" Mr. Heath's answer is that the British economy is entering a period of new expansion, unlike the deflationary period of Labor's freeze (1966). He is gambling that a higher standard of living and lower levels of taxation will somehow induce the unions to be more reasonable when this freeze ends. This is some gamble.

Much will depend on the promised phase two to follow the standstill, carefully described as, "a program for controlling inflation," the first stage. The second stage will cover roughly the ground of the collapsed talks Mr. Heath held with unions and industry. There will be a flat-rate ceiling for wage increases of upward of 10 pounds ($24) applied equally to all as a means of improving relatively the lot of the lower-paid. More than two million workers in Britain earn less than $50 a week on straight time.

Also in the second phase the government expects to establish sophisticated machinery for controlling prices and wages. It is uncertain now what the balance will be between the voluntary and statutory elements of this stage. Mr. Heath stressed, however, that the wholly voluntary deal had fallen through and that the second phase would include legislation.

Whether the long-feared flood of demands emerges will depend to some degree on whether the standstill can be converted into a permanent compact of co-operation. Mr. Heath's relations with the unions give absolutely no reason for optimism on this score.



EDWARD HEATH
. . . some gamble

The unions are really the ones to watch — not only in the long run but immediately. It is not just a question of whether they will unleash high demands when it becomes legal to do so. It is also a question of whether they will respect provisions of the proposed standstill legislation curbing their right to strike, as they have not respected the government's Industrial Relations Act. Mr. Heath deliberately made a strong appeal for respect for the law.

Officials frankly admitted that while they drew widely on U.S. experience in framing this legislation, they were obliged to diverge in order to have regard for the power of British trade unions.

Only a small percentage of U.S. labor is unionized compared to Britain. As an institution the office of the British prime minister does not command the same respect as the office of the president does among the respective populations, particularly the unions. To add the personalities of present incumbents, Mr. Heath is loathed by union leaders because of his reform legislation. A strong militant element in Britain is dedicated to obstructing the Conservative government on principle, using industrial action as its weapon.

The control mechanism — most immediate test of first stage success — got off to a confused and uncertain start. Officials didn't help by suggesting the legislation itself would not make illegal changes in prices because there is no machinery for policing such a bill. When the draft was published it did indeed prohibit increases, to wit: "Prices, or charges to which this section applies, and which are for transactions effected at a time when this section applied to the prices or charges, shall not exceed the prices or charges for transactions of the same description effected by the same person in the course of business before November 6."

Housewives Policemen

The policing, it seems, is being left to the housewife. She is encouraged to complain by telephoning special numbers at a prices control unit. "Mum's army" one paper dubbed it. Tory ministers who likely never bought a pound of bacon in their lives never tire of advising the housewife to "shop around." And she does make shopping around in the countless little stores much more of an occupation than anything Canadian housewives would contemplate.

If a complaint is justified the responsible minister will instruct the offender to revert to the former price. Only if that injunction is disobeyed will prosecution proceed. The draft provides a maximum penalty of £400 on summary conviction, unlimited fines for indictment.

This is what Jack Jones, militant boss of the transport union, calls a mockery. Mr. Heath rejects his suggestion that weights and measures inspectors enforce prices. Exemptions are for meat, fish, fruit, vegetables based wholly on seasonal or external forces.

Fairly clearly the government's faith is in the goodwill and co-operation of the vast majority in business and industry. Fortunately there is a consensus that they will get it. At least that retailers and wholesalers will give the system a good try. No such optimistic judgment dare be made about the unions on the wages side. Stressing the temporary nature of this rough justice the government has therefore every reason to proceed to more sophisticated and more permanent structures with all speed.

JAMES RESTON

Too Incredible for Fiction

WASHINGTON — In the days after an American Presidential election, the winner has almost more problems than he can handle, and the loser more regrets than he can bear. Maybe, then, we should pause about now to consider the human efforts, accidents, triumphs and tragedies of this campaign.

No sensible book publisher would have risked much money a couple of years or so ago on a political novel with a story as fantastic as the facts in the Presidential campaign of 1972. In fact, no professional novelist, no matter how imaginative, would have dared write such a melodramatic script with such an unlikely cast of characters or such strange twists of history and human caprice.

There was, to begin with, the death and tragedy on the bridge on Chappaquiddick, removing from the drama in the first scene Edward Kennedy, the main hope of the Democratic party and the logical successor to his two murdered brothers. Even Edgar Allan Poe, drunk or sober, wouldn't have dared begin one of his dramatic tales with such a startling event.

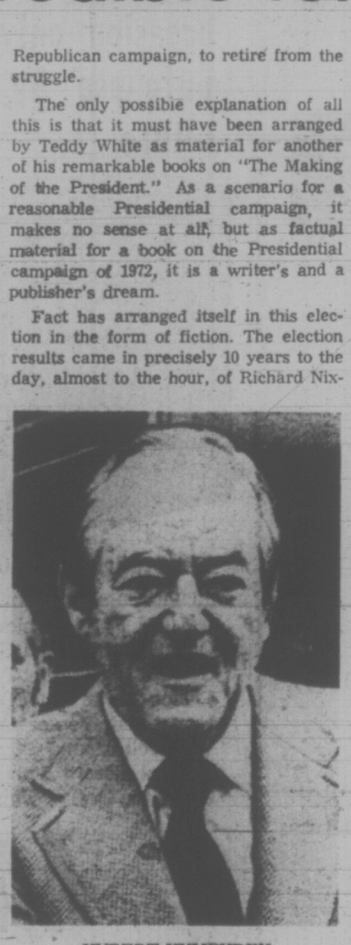
Wallace Tragedy

Add to that the tragedy of Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, taken out of the race just when he was beginning to make progress in the North and hold the balance of power between the two major parties, shot and wounded by an assassin who had been hounding not only Wallace but the President.

Then, of course, there is Hubert Humphrey, yearning for one last chance, but cutting up both Ed Muskie and George McGovern in the process, and the poignant history of Senator Eagleton, and Muskie crying in the snow on the steps of the Union Leader in Manchester, N.H., and all that hanky-panky with millions of Republican dollars and grain and milk deals, and the Watergate burglars caught bugging the Democratic headquarters, and Martha Mitchell being attacked and drugged by her own security agents and finally forcing her husband, the Attorney General, and head of the Republican campaign, to retire from the struggle.

The only possible explanation of all this is that it must have been arranged by Teddy White as material for another of his remarkable books on "The Making of the President." As a scenario for a reasonable Presidential campaign, it makes no sense at all, but as factual material for a book on the Presidential campaign of 1972, it is a writer's and a publisher's dream.

Fact has arranged itself in this election in the form of fiction. The election results came in precisely 10 years to the day, almost to the hour, of Richard Nixon's farewell to politics on the morning after he lost the governor's race to Pat Brown of California in 1962. And the men who were in the Presidential suite of the Beverly Hilton Hotel with him then (suite 724) — Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Finch, Klein, Ziegler, when he gave his "last press conference" and announced his withdrawal from politics — are the men who are with him now in the White House, still nursing their wrath against the wicked press and Democrats.



HUBERT HUMPHREY
. . . one last chance

Why the American novelists do not move to Washington I do not know. Even the details of this human story are astonishing. Julie and Tricia Nixon were children in 1956, when their father was vice-president and fighting for his political life and for President Eisenhower's confidence in the Checkers speech over a Nixon "secret campaign fund" that now seems almost innocent compared to this year's Republican "secret fund" of millions, but here is Julie Nixon married now to President Eisenhower's grandson, and Tricia married to a handsome, modern Harvard type, and the whole Nixon family standing for the President and Republican "respectability."

It would be hard to overestimate the political influence of the Nixon family in this campaign. I can remember asking Mr. Nixon at Christmas of 1967 why he was going to run again and whether his wife wanted him to do it. He said she preferred to disappear into private life, but would go along with whatever he wanted to do. And since then, in China, the Soviet Union, and out in the country, she has struggled against her own shyness, and like most wives, supported her guy and obviously helped his ambitions.

Driven to Exhaustion

The same thing can be said about the McGovern family only under much more difficult circumstances. Eleanor McGovern has not only been a partner but a critic of her husband's campaign. She has gone out on her own and argued the issues even more directly an bravely than those two other remarkable Democratic wives, Eleanor Roosevelt and Ladybird Johnson, and has driven herself in the process to the point of physical exhaustion.

Accordingly, it would be a pity on the figurative morning after the election, merely to deal with the mathematics, tactics, strategy, and dirty tricks of the campaign, and not to recognize the human accidents, struggles, devotion, and even love of the candidates and their families and workers in the struggle.

Care of Fish

When our class went to Goldstream, we all ran up and down the river bank watching the fish jump and wiggle. Later in the day, Mr. Freeman King came. He explained to us that when we ran up and down the beach it disturbed the fish. And they weren't just jumping to get up a water fall, it was because we were scaring them by running. Never in one day had we learned so many things. But when we heard he had only one assistant, we became concerned. Why would they have only one man and his assistant to take care of all those parks? We need more educated people to care for the parks. More signs and posters are needed to tell people what not to do. Mr. King does a very, very good job, but we need younger people to help. — Connie Knudson, 3029 Craigowan Road.

Causes

As a defeated Conservative candidate in the federal election I am disturbed and disgusted with the reaction of some of the news media to the results. Having knocked on hundreds of doors myself, I can state positively that not once was I asked about Quebec. Over and over and over again I was hit by the two simple basic questions: "Where can I get a job?" and "How can I live on my pension?"

It was mainly the failure of the Liberal government to offer any constructive campaign proposals whatsoever on these key life issues that caused the election results, not any relationship with Quebec. — R. C. Quittenton, Windsor, Ont.

Prisoners

We think capturing whales and taking them from their natural habitat is cruel, and is like jailing them for a crime not done. They should be allowed their freedom before they become extinct. How would you like to live in your bathtub and do tricks for your food for the rest of your life? We think the practice of keeping whales, like Chimo, in captivity is absolutely cruel. We are two very concerned 12-year-old girls and hope, Mr. Editor, something will be done to stop the capturing of whales from now on. — Nancy Silcox and Cheryl Randall, 577 Hampshire Rd.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of November 15, 1912:

Deep down in the bowels of the ship and in the glare of the open furnace two sons of Japan engaged in a fierce struggle aboard the Osaka Shosen Kaisha liner Panama Maru, Capt. Kanao, as she was steaming up the straits at an early hour this morning. In the duel one of the participants was stabbed in the left lung and when the steamship arrived here he was in a precarious condition. Grave doubts were held for his recovery.

A Climate Too Harsh for the Seeds of Mercy

By JAMES EAYRS

"It would be the most immoral thing I could think of." So Richard Nixon declared a few days before his landslide re-election, and one listened nervously to hear from this commander-in-chief who had waged a dehumanized war against the peoples of Southeast Asia, from this party leader who had conducted espionage against his political opponents, from this president who had let slip state intelligence so that cronies could take their profits, just what the most immoral thing he could think of might prove to be. Wait for it: "To give amnesty to deserters and draft evaders."

Amnesty — an act of state removing all legal memory of political offences, casting such deeds into limbo and oblivion—is in the news in two countries today. One is a squalid police state, the other a great democracy. What a paradox it is that it should be the police state which practises the politics of mercy and magnanimity, the great democracy which practises the politics of revenge and recrimination. East Germany — of all places — is letting its politcal prisoners free. The United States — of all places — is keeping them locked up or exiled.

Americans have not always held conscientious objectors in withering contempt, not always gazed with stony disfavor at those among them who for reasons of ethical scruple and all but the most orthodox of established religious tenets refuse to bear arms for their Republic.

Amnesty fared well in 19th-century America. Abraham Lincoln, known in his time as a "pardoning president," forgave draft evaders even in the midst of civil war, offered amnesty to confederate rebels in 1863. "Is nobody to be beheaded, nobody to be hanged?" their leader asked rhetorically when accepting Lincoln's offer. "Where would be the warning to future ambitious and unscrupulous demagogues? I answer, that if the awful deluge of ruin and desolation that has come upon the country should be no warning to the people not again to follow such leaders . . . would the bringing to the block of a few guilty heads, or the exile of their owners have that effect?"

The answer was thought to be clearly no, and, following Lincoln's murder, Andrew Johnson's proclamation of three amnesties shows he thought so too.

It has been otherwise in 20th-century America. After World War I, writes Murray Polner (one of the widening band of younger U.S. historians led by their personal experience into the study of pacifism and resistance), the United States emerged as "a frightened great power, creditor of the world, untouched by war but anxious with buried conflicts, turned in nightmarish hallucinations on imaginary plotters. In so mad a setting amnesty was impossible." Woodrow Wilson, for all his absolutist moralism or perhaps because of it) refused to consider amnesty for anyone. Not until the end of 1924 did the doors of prison open to set dissenters free.

V-J day in the United States found nearly 16,000 Americans in prison for failing to fight in World War II. An Amnesty Board sifted through their records, released less than 10 cent. The remainder — "those who have set themselves up," as the board sardonically described them, "as wiser and more competent than society to determine their duty to come to the defence of the nation" — including blacks who refused to enlist in segregated armed forces, Puerto Rican nationalists, Hopi Indian pacifists, and Jehovah's Witnesses, were made to serve their time.

The climate of opinion in America today seems too harsh for seeds of mercy to mature. A moving letter by a Baltimore journalist to an errant daughter meditating somewhere deep in India catches the mood perfectly. "Although I know," he writes to her, "that your pursuit of a personal peace goes deeper than merely escaping the prevailing standards and values of current Western culture, I class you to some extent with the young men of your age who took up foreign residence to avoid conscription in an unpopular war. As a parent I would like to be able to say: Come home, all is forgiven; or in your case, come home, attitudes and the general atmosphere are much improved now. But I can't honestly say any such thing. Forgiveness is at a low, low ebb. Forgiveness is almost as bad as permissiveness, which is a derogatory term applied to anything that smacks of tolerance and compassion."

LINCOLN

NIXON

My own recent sampling of American opinion confirms that assessment. At a family funeral in a small Michigan town last week the congregation knelt and prayed: "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us." But few if any of its members favored amnesty for draft dodgers, let alone deserters. I know, because I asked them.

Greatly complicating the politics of amnesty in the aftermath of war in Indochina — unlike the aftermaths of World Wars I and II — is the conviction among its potential beneficiaries that, so far as they're concerned, there's nothing to forgive. America's war criminals, they feel — and they feel it with passionate intensity — are not ensconsed in ashrams in India, communes in Toronto and Vancouver, cells in the U.S. Federal Correctional Institution at Danbury, Connecticut or Allenwood Prison Camp near Lewisburg, Pennsylvania.

America's war criminals are ensconsed in the White House in Washington, D.C. "We are not waiting for amnesty," writes Roger Williams from Montreal. "The present government of the United States does not have the right to forgive us, nor to grant us amnesty — implying we were once guilty of a crime — because we were never guilty of any crime. Recognizing the United States' own Nuremburg principle establishing individual responsibility in the face of a nation's criminal activities; the war resisters have, as responsible citizens, refused to participate in their nation's crimes. It is not for war resisters in exile to ask forgiveness from a government which perpetuates those crimes."

That seems to me well said. But it will not seem so to those 50 million Americans who have just given about the biggest vote of confidence in history to the man whom the majority of "Amexiles" revile as United States Public Enemy No. 1. So the many thousands of them who have made Canada their home for the duration will continue to stay among us.

Now I come to what may seem a side issue of this moral issue. How many thousands of young Americans have chosen Canada to jail?

That may appear just a numbers game.

What does it matter anyway how many thousands have come to us — 15,000, 30,000, 50,000, 100,000 — so long as they're not hassled in the midst of us?

Earlier this year I spoke to a U.S. audience in New York City under the watchful eye of our consul-general there. I was speaking of the impact of these involuntary visitors upon our quality of life. I judged this almost wholly beneficial. They have brought, I said, variety and vitality to our ways of doing things, looking at things, thinking about things. They have raised the level of our political consciousness. (I added that the level stood so low that it was very easy to raise.)

But when I began to play the numbers game, our consul-general lost his cool and chewed me out. I said that there were anywhere from 50,000 to 100,000 Americans exiled in Canada. He said I was a liar. He said his office kept the closest watch of draft dodgers and deserters. Nowhere near 50,000 of these had come to Canada, he claimed. 10,000, 12,000, certainly no more.

It does not seem to have occurred to our consul-general in New York City that his job as custodian and burnisher of our national image in the United States is if anything to overstate, not understate, the extent of our hospitality to these young Americans whose sole offence against their country — if offence is what it is — has been to cherish freedom so highly that they refuse to submit to a draft or military service in a war their conscience told them was unjust and evil.

But it has occurred to our prime minister. Asked what he would have done had he been one of them, Pierre Trudeau replied: "God knows what I would think if I were of that age. But I could perhaps answer your question indirectly by saying that those who make the conscientious judgment that they must not participate in this war and who become draft dodgers have my complete sympathy, and indeed our political approach has been to give them access to Canada whether they are draft-dodgers or — even more serious — deserters from the ranks of their armed forces."

As he revamps his policies following the debacle of October 30, Prime Minister Trudeau ought to tell his consul-general in New York City to bring his attitude back into line with the attitude of the government of Canada.

YOUNG KILLER DUE FOR RELEASE

'I Was Crazy But I Changed'

By IVAN G. GOLDMAN
The Washington Post

Kenneth William Clark, 19, says he is a different person than the boy he was on that nightmarish morning almost four years ago when he killed is mother, brother and two sisters.

"I know myself," he said. "I know I'm not a violent person. I try to be very considerate. I try to be . . . gentle."

"There's nothing I can say that will justify what I did," he said. "I was crazy."

Clark was interviewed at the Clifton T. Perkins state hospital in Jessup, Md., where he was confined for an indeterminate time in May, 1969, after he was acquitted of four counts of murder by reason of insanity.

It was the unanimous opinion of the hospital staff Oct. 26 that Clark, who has been allowed outside the institution for more than a year to commute to work and school, is ready for a conditional release to a halfway house in Baltimore.

'I'm Certain'

The first step in securing that release was taken more than a week ago, when Dr. John M. Hamilton, Perkins superintendent, requested the necessary court order from the Montgomery county circuit court.

A psychiatrist at the institution said such requests generally are honored, and that if the history of other patients is any guide, Clark should be released within a couple of months.

"Of course, first of all," Clark said, "there's nothing I could possible do to change the past. Nothing. The best that could be done in keeping me here would be just to keep me off the street and away from people, and that's not necessary. I'm certain of that."

He spoke from inside a wire mesh enclosed semicircular room reserved for inmates seeing visitors. The visitors sit in chairs around the wire perimeter, across from the inmates.

Clark is about 6 feet 2 inches tall now, of medium build. Newspapers described him as 5-feet-10 when the slaying was committed. He has a moustache, longish hair, and wears gold-tinted glasses and has a love bracelent around his left wrist.

His brother, R. Franklin Clark, was only 8 years old when Clark killed him. Susan was 10 and Roberta 13. His mother, Elenora J. Clark, was 33 when her son rampaged through their split-level home in Rockville, Md., a suburb of Washington, killing all in the family but the father, Navy Lt. Robert P. Clark, who was then serving in Vietnam.

Clark said he sank into deep depression the first nine months after the killings. "I was the most remorseful kind of sad, denigrating individual you have ever laid your eyes on.

"At the end of the nine months, I just came out of it. Since then, I've been developing, trying to get my head together."

He received intensive therapy almost daily from a psychiatrist at first, Clark said, coupled with tranquilizing drugs. He has been without tranquilizers more than two years now, he said, and psychotherapy sessions have been less frequent as their need faded.

Split Personality

Both state and defense psychiatrists agreed at the trial that Clark suffered from extreme schizophrenia, or split personality, a psychotic disorder characterized by the patient's loss of contact with reality.

Police testifed that Clark told them he suffered from a recurring nightmare in which his younger brother threatened him with a burning candle that was transformed into a club studded with blades.

He awoke at about 2:30 a.m., Jan. 24, 1969, terrified from the nightmare, and decided to kill R. Franklin, police said. He found a croquet mallet, paring knife and boy scout handkerchief. Clark was a boy scout.

Clark throttled his brother with the handkerchief, struck him with the mallet and stabbed him in the back with knife.

Then, according to the testimony, Clark decided to kill the rest of the family "because they would find out." He found an ax and went into his sister's bedroom.

He struck Susan in the head. Her scream woke Roberta, whom he killed.

Bodies in Closets

His mother shouted from her bedroom and Clark waited behind the door. When she entered, he killed her with the ax. He stuffed the bodies in closets.

But when police, called by suspicious neighbors, came to the house, Clark denied nothing.

Although he consented to the interview willingly, he refrained from discussing the killings specifically. This, he said, was for reasons of "privacy."

"I can't give anybody else a real understanding," he said. "My experience and the experience of others are totally different. For example, you can't look at the Grand Canyon and bring across your total impression of it to someone else.

"If you're working on a machine and you mess up and the machine chops your hand off, I mean, that's trouble. But no amount of crying, prayer, anything, is going to bring that hand back. It's the same kind of way."

There is no harshness in his tone. He seems a rational person talking about the acts of another. And, in fact, that was the way it seemed to him when he read newspaper accounts of the killings shortly after they occurred.

Clark said that the recurring dream and subsequent killing of his brother were caused, at least partially, by his jealousy of R. Franklin. "I just don't want to go any deeper that that," he said. "It's very involved.

When asked whether it seemed he killed his brother in a psychotic rage, but that the slayings of the others seemed coldly planned — a desperate but self-seeking attempt to get rid of witnesses — Clark said:

"No. My judgment wasn't rational. I was still in a fantasy. I just don't care to go into it any deeper than that."

Robert H. Sauer, clinical director of Perkins, maintains that Clark is not a danger to himself or others. Under the terms of the projected release, Clark would live in the halfway house three to six months, then report to the outpatient clinic until the end of the five-year conditional release.

Clark had been under sporadic psychiatric care before the killings. He had been involved in incidents of stealing, drinking and cruelty to animals, court records show.

All this is ended too, Clark said. "Like I said, I've changed."

High Intelligence

At the trial, teachers described the young Clark's intelligence from average to well above average. All agreed he lacked initiative, court records show.

He hopes to be a marine biologist now. After release, he intends to work to increase his savings of $900, then enrol in college.

He will not try to contact his father, now a lieutenant commander. "I don't figure in his life now. Why should I go remind him? I've heard he's recovered pretty well now. That's a blow — that's your whole family — your life."

THE QUICK DEAL ALIMONY LAWYERS

By SCOTT YOUNG
The Globe and Mail

We were driving north through the city when I asked my friend the driver how his wife was. "Well," he said, "she's fine — but we're separated." Then it turned out that they were in the early stages of divorce, which is a cross between being in the early stages of the bends and the late stages of cholera.

It is my custom in such situations to assume my role as the founding chairman of Alimony Anonymous, and I was not terribly surprised to find that here we had a prime subject.

"They want about 40 per cent of my pay in alimony," he said, causing me to take the Lord's name in vain about 12 consecutive times without drawing a breath.

Of course, what he meant by "they" was not the courts, but the two lawyers who by then were going through their stately legal dance like a couple of whooping cranes. Writing letters to each other with the eventual aim of giving this bride of five years a pension for life and loading this husband of five years with such a financial burden that eventually he'll curse the day they met, instead of remembering what they did have that was good, however short a time it lasted.

They have a small child who must be provided for, as the first essential. In this country with its scandalous shortage of day-care centres, this becomes a greater problem than in most countries. It is also a strong lever for grasping ex-wives and their lawyers. The father knows he must provide for his child and fervently wishes to do so well. But the lever used on him is that he must therefore not only pay child support, but ante up enough that the child will be raised in a good home whether the wife works or not.

One proposition made to this young husband is that even after he has signed away 40 per cent of his income (gross income, that is), when his wife is willing and able to work he must pay another $75 a week for a housekeeper. The ridiculous piles on the ludicrous. The greatest sitting ducks in our society today are those ex-husbands who have demands like this made on them. Being an ex-wife in this situation is better than being an alderman, after the 100 per cent raise goes through.

Luckily, divorce court judges are usually a lot more reasonable than lawyers trying to reach a financial settlement they can have signed and presented in court for the judge to okay. I haven't any computer-bank of actual figures, but my impression is that it is a lot better for the husband in an amputated marriage to let the whole thing go to court and have the judge decide alimony and child support.

Of course, the lawyers see it differently. The wife's lawyer feels it his duty to gouge in a way that he'd never do in any other kind of a case (I hope). The husband's lawyer is bound to fight back, and many do.

But there are also divorce lawyers who are very reminiscent of a certain kind of real estate agent. For these the quick deal, and a lot of them is less trouble, and more profitable, than holding out for the proper price.

That's one reason why low flat-rate divorce fees are sometimes not good. A man is better to have a lawyer who will fight like a tiger, and be paid a few hundred dollars more, than one of the machine guys who works on the basis that if you can get the man to pay what his wife asks, no matter how high, you get in and out fast, crying, "Set 'em up in the other alley."

I attempted to persuade my friend to call his lawyer, withdraw all offers, break off all financial negotiations and let the court decide. I don't know whether he did or not.

Is There Nothing Sacred?

By JOHN NICHOL

In the old days Canada had many national symbols. Every school child knew what they were. But — we took them for granted — and now they are nearly all gone. Look, for instance, what they have done to the Mounties. First they took away all the horses and gave them snowmobiles. (Have you ever tried eating your snowmobiles one by one as you are waiting to be rescued?) Then Maclean's Magazine, Canada's official conscience and guardian of the National soul, came out with a nasty article about how one nice Mountie was bullied by all the bad Mounties. That did it. The Mounties are now the Fuzz.

Beavers have become a big bore. The Indians used to trade beaver pelts for beads and bits of broken glass. Now the landscape is strewn with broken glass and the Indians have all they want without trading beaver skins for it. So no one needs beavers any more. When you think of all the beaver has done for the Canadian image — more perhaps than Information Canada and the Ookpik combined — it is sort of sad.

Think for a moment of Canadian rye whisky. There is a Canadian symbol for you. When American G.I.'s are overseas they think of Mom and apple pie, Canadians think of Mom and rye whisky.

Whole generations of Canadians first learned about life while sitting in hotel rooms drinking rye and coke from green plastic tooth-pick glasses. There is no nectar like rye and water from a dixie cup in the men's room of a pullman car lurching across the Prairies. But all that has gone.

The press reports an interview with the head of a major distillery — a Mr. Krutzen, who says that rye is not made from rye at all. "The basic grain is a feed, usually used for fattening pigs. It's called milo, a kind of sorghum raised in the U.S. from Texas on up through the Middle West."

"We use milo," Krutzen explained, "because it has the greatest amount of starch of any grain for it's price."

Well Mr. Krutzen, you have gone too far. Take your milo, and your sorghum, and your starch and go away to Texas. Fatten your pigs. But leave our rye whisky alone. We have so little left to cling to.

Parents' Suits Feared

Could a school teacher one day be sued for giving a child a learning problem in the same way a doctor can be taken to court for giving a child a limp?

Trustee Philip Ney, a clinical child psychiatrist, thinks it could happen.

He asked the school board's administration committee Tuesday night to look into the need for buying malpractice insurance.

"We shouldn't wait for some big court case," he said. "There is a sharply increasing awareness among parents of the importance of education."

The administration agreed to seek the advice of the board's solicitor and report back.

Ney suggested that certain places showed higher rates of problematic school children than others.

"To a degree this is the result of teachers' personalities and not of socio-economic or other factors," he said.

Ney made the comments in explaining his motion that applicants for permanent teaching appointments should have personality evaluations.

By "personality evaluations," Ney meant psychological tests that could show profiles of deviant potential in people.

Trustee Lavina Greenwood said the idea of tests was offensive.

"After all, what are interviews conducted for?" she asked. "People can change. They can be charming at 30 and perfectly impossible at 45."

and BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Smiles will be wide and back-slapping rampant 10 days from now in the convention rooms of Vancouver's plush Bayshore Inn.

The occasion will be the annual convention of the B.C. New Democrat Party, the party's first convention as the government party.

The happiness is understandable. After 39 years spent in an opposition role, the "socialist hordes" not only made it to the gates of British Columbia, they marched right in through the front door and took the place over. And if that kind of election victory doesn't make party regulars happy, it's hard to imagine what would.

More than 800 delegates will be attending the convention next week. And with the larger-than-ever complement of visitors and press people expected, attendance could well climb over 1,000 for the three-day affair.

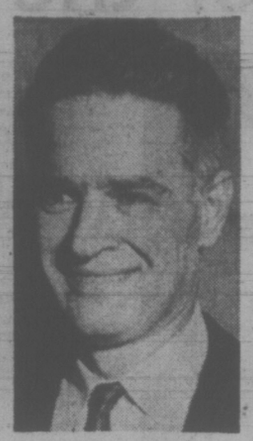
NEVER SATISFIED

However, all is not expected to be sweetness and light at the Bayshore, says Dave Stupich, party president and the government's minister of agriculture.

The NDP, by its very nature, he says, is never satisfied with the status quo.



STUPICH
. . . some will complain

"There will be people who will argue that we should have accomplished more in total or should have gone in different directions," Stupich said in a recent interview.

"I'm, not thinking of anything in particular when I say that," he said. "But it's just that certain people we have in our party are not going to be satisfied, even though in the short time we have been in, mountains may have been moved."

Stupich said he does not object to such criticism from the grass roots of the party.

"In fact I welcome it," he said. "The success of our government depends on us keeping in touch generally with people but with the party in particular.

"They are the ones who have to work to get us re-elected. They are the ones who have to know what we are doing, why we are doing it and why we are not doing other things."

But because the party is so new in its governing role, Stupich has attempted to change the scope of the convention. Instead of concentrating on general party policy, this year's effort will be aimed at working out regional problems.

SEVEN AREAS

The province has been divided up into seven areas — the north, the Kootenays, the central Interior, Vancouver Island, Greater Vancouver, the Lower Mainland suburbs and the Fraser Valley.

Background papers will be prepared dealing with the specific problems in each area before the delegates get around to dealing with the problems of the community at large.

This concept of regionalism is a departure from the usual procedure at NDP conventions, Stupich said. The party ordinarily uses its convention as a vehicle to formulte policy, but this month's meeting has to be an exception. The government has not had a chance to fully implement the policies it was elected on, he said. So "we certainly don't want policies changed until we have had an opportunity to live up to our election promises."

Another element of the convention which is not likely to surprise too many people is the selection of a party leader for the coming year.

"I would not be tremendously surprised if someone were nominated to contest the leadership," said Stupich. "But I would be very surprised if he got any more than a half-dozen votes."

FORMALITY VOTE

The party leadership vote is taken at every convention but is destined to be little more than a formality this time around.

As far as Premier Barrett and his cabinet ministers are concerned, they will be used mainly in a consultative capacity, reporting on the situation in their separate departments, Stupich said.

Barrett will address the convention on its first night and is expected to speak in a general way on what the government has been doing and plans to do in the foreseeable future.

But that is about the extent of the participation by Barrett and of the cabinet. Backbench MLAs will be expected to participate more fully in debates and discussions, Stupich said.

A measure of the government's newness is the fact that the convention will be an entirely new experience to many of the NDP backbenchers. As a result, it will be a learning exercise for some.

Whatever else happens, there will be no domination of the convention proceedings by the party's elected members, Stupich said. The party just wouldn't stand for it.

Recount Upholds NDPers Election

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — A recount of rejected ballots from 44 polls in the Nickel Belt riding Tuesday confirmed a seat in the Commons for New Democratic Party candidate John Rodriguez.

In the Oct. 30 federal election Mr. Rodriguez defeated incumbent Liberal Gaetan Serre, by about 2,000 votes, but election officials rejected 4,718 ballots.

Mr. Serre called for a recount after Liberal supporters claimed the majority of rejected ballots favored him with an X-marking after his name rather than in the circle on the ballot.

When a recount of rejected ballots in 44 of the 207 polls in the riding failed to indicate enough votes in favor of Mr. Serre to change the outcome of the election, the Liberal terminated the procedure.

Of the 1,690 rejected ballots counted Tuesday, 48.1 per cent were intended for Mr. Serre, and 39.4 per cent for Mr. Rodriguez.

Mr. Serre said before the recount that he needed at least 65 per cent of the rejected votes before further action would be taken to contest the result.

During the recount, District Court Judge James Cooper ruled he would not allow ballots to be counted in the official vote if the marking was outside the circle and beside the candidate's name.

He did say however, ballots marked both in the circle and beside the name would be counted as valid.

MIMIST ON FINE EDGE

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

The art of thought made visible—of minute anf perfect muscular control over every inch of the body; the golden art of silent communication.

That is the art of Claude St-Denis, Canada's gift to the ancient and rare skill of the mime.

Montreal-born St-Denis, an internationally noted performer made a single appearance in Victoria, Tuesday, before a capacity audience at Open Space on Fort Street.

From the moment the artist assumed his commedia dell' arte white - face makeup, through the dazzling 75-minute performance that followed, this was a classical evening in the theatre.

St-Denis has honed the comedic aspects of his art to a glistening edge as fine and sensitive as that of the great Stan Laurel. His fiendishly gleeful dentist and his "man in an elevator" for example, were packed with the childish malevolence and idiot panic that made Laurel's work so poignant.

Then we see him as the old, bent bell-ringer given a fleeting moment of youthful vigor by the great swinging of his bells until the stilling ropes and the dying echoes return him to the sorrow and the sourness of age.

He was assisted in his performance by Lucie Bertrand, who presented the titles of his various mimes and shared a scene in which she played an inflatable doll with style and fine discipline.

All French Classes Organized

A school board committee Tuesday night discussed setting up "at least" one Grade 7 class to be conducted entirely in French.

The class would be offered to all Grade 7 students on a first come first served basis, with a minimum of 25 needed to set up the class.

No more than two classes would be organized for three years, with annual evaluation. Teachers would be French-speaking.

The proposal was made by Trustee Philip Ney and school superintendent A. J. Longmore following a trip to Montreal to inspect immersion programs in English-speaking areas of that city.

Immersion courses are currently being run in Coquitlam school district.

The Victoria class, or classes, proposal is "two or three months down the way," Longmore said.

A similar immersion program at Grade 1 level was recommended for one school to start in September, 1974.

Saanich Drain Cost Up $60,000

An estimated $60,000 escalation in cost of three proposed drainage projects staggered members of Saanich public works committee Tuesday.

Estimates in the current budget for priority drainage undertakings in Gordon Head, Cordova Bay and on Bethune between Saanich Road and Cloverdale amounted to something over $30,000 while the actual cost will be closer to $100,000, municipal engineer Bob Daye indicated.

"This is an area of desperate need for drains and the price tag is staggering," said Ald. Edith Gunning.

She said the situation points up the problem of drains generally in Saanich and she was worried about what may happen in the Ash-Barrie-Bissenden area near Mt. Douglas this winter.

GUNNING
. . . price staggering

That project, to eliminate flooding and do away with an old installation that empties over a cliff, was estimated at $29,000 and was given high priority in the 1972 capital works budget.

The engineer said he was not prepared to go into detailed estimates on that project but promised a complete report, including financial aspects, within a week. He said members of the department were "having second thoughts about the figures we put together."

Economies could be realized by combining the storm drain with sanitary sewer installations in that area by using a common trench for pipes, Daye said.

Mayor Hugh Curtis remarked the area had been in need for so long — "If money can be allocated from unassigned funds, let's do it."

Daye said there was $145,000 provided in the budget for unspecified projects.

The second item referred to a $3,000 project for storm drain on Major and Totem at Cordova Bay now estimated to cost $12,000. "A very small amount" was estimated for the Bethune work, Daye said, but an additional $20,000 would be required, or $13,300 with credits that could be applied.

The committee recommended the Major-Totem and Bethune projects be done as soon as possible using unassigned funds and that other storm drain recommendations be brought forward quickly.

In another matter the committee asked for a feasibility report on extending and deepening a culvert on Maplewood to alleviate winter flooding.

E. W. Hockin, 3510 Maplewood, told the committee of chronic winter flooding problems and the engineer reported estimated cost of a local improvement drainage project was $20,000.

But only four of 12 residents in the block would benefit by the project and he doubted the local improvement petition would carry.

Hockin said five lots were troubled with basements flooding and furnaces failing as a result. His own house flooded three times in four months, he said.

The mayor said he had lived in one of the houses referred to and never experienced flooding, but Hockin suggested that was before a subdivision above the properties was built.

He said he had a two-months-old son and a neighbor has a five-months-old daughter and they could not keep risking the infants' health with loss of heat.

Curtis said he did not "mean to put down that there's been flooding, but we can make damn sure all systems are working this winter and that would be cheaper than a $20,000 local improvement."

The committee approved the inclusion of seven lots immediately outside the sewer enterprise boundary in the current sewerage undertaking as being in the public interest.

Sanitary problems on the foreshore below Vantreight and Shore Way would be eliminated by amending the bylaw to include six Shore Way lots and one parcel on Vantreight, the engineer said.

Aldermen also approved sewer connections for a 12-lot subdivision east of Ferndale to be called Saltair Place, a 21-lot development between Saanich and Morgan to be named Landeen Place and a seven-lot subdivision at the east end of Duke Street.

TRAFFIC DEPT. TERMED 'RIGID AND NEGATIVE'

Rigidity and negativism in the Saanich traffic engineering department were hit Tuesday night by Mayor Hugh Curtis at a meeting that dealt with parking on McKenzie Avenue.

He was commenting on an engineering recommendation to retain no-parking signs on part of McKenzie west of Quadra, in response to a request from an invalid, Edith B. Hick, 991 McKenzie, who asked consideration to allow a car to stop outside her home.

"Far too often out of traffic engineering we're getting negative reports. We're dealing with a closed mind and I'm getting very tired of it," the mayor said.

Ald. Leslie Passmore told public works committee the report was in error in referring to all no-parking signs in the vicinity. He said the problem could be solved by erecting one sign permitting residential parking, he said.

At present the meals-on-wheels vehicle and public health nurse are unable to park in front of the Hick home, nor can the woman's son load her wheelchair into his car without violating the restriction, the committee was told.

Saanich banned parking in the block to eliminate a hazard for cars emerging from private driveways and to prevent all-day parking of B.C. Telephone Co. employees from a nearby service centre.

Municipal engineer Bob Daye suggested a six-to-eight weekday parking prohibition, remarking that he did not think Saanich police would ticket a meals-on-wheels car or a public health nurse's car.

Curtis said the problem then would be in asking police to "wink at some vehicles and not at others . . . who is to say there are not special cases elsewhere?"

The problem was that "we have built up a rigidity in traffic signs in this municipality and we are unwilling to try something new," the mayor said.

"Our suggestions are dismissed summarily by people at the traffic level and police. I'm getting very upset about it."

He suggested the complete ban on parking was "using a sledgehammer to kill a flea," and felt a 15-minute limit on parking might serve the purpose.

Passmore moved both sides of McKenzie between Quadra and Saanich Road be posted for residential parking only, which the committee accepted.

Lake Pollution Study Needs Provincial Help

The metro health board decided Tuesday to ask the provincial government for additional staff so it can undertake pollution surveys of 17 regional lakes.

Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread, senior public health officer, said there have been urgent requests in recent years for such action from residents near many of the lakes but there had not been staff available.

He had considered initially seeking a Local Initiatives Program grant to pay for eight surveyors who would inspect the lake shorelines, conduct dye tests of sewage systems where houses were within 100 feet of lakes and take water samples for analysis.

But, he told the board, he now believes experienced staff are needed to handle the work and produce valid studies. The board approved his recommendation that the province be asked to pay for two additional inspectors.

Lakes in question in the unorganized territory west of Victoria are Fairey, Kemp, Young, Glintz, Matheson Glen, Langford, Florence and Thetis.

On the Saanich Peninsula they are Prospect, Beaver-Elk and Blenkinsop and on the Gulf Islands, St. Mary's Maxwell, Cusheon and Weston Lakes.

A summary by Whitbread said there has been an increase in housing around lakes in the past decade and some structures intended as summer cottages were now serving as year-round residences.

Where the lakes are used for domestic water supply frequent water samples have been taken and treatment required where tests indicated a need.

"Complaints are continuing to be received from the various groups living around the lakes, e.g.: Glen Lake Residents' Association, Langford Lake Improvement District, St. Mary's Lake residents, etc.," the report said.

"All these lakes have a group of residents vociferous in their requests for a current assessment of the pollution going into their lakes."

Whitbread said the only way to obtain this information and rectify any problems found is through obtaining additional full-time staff.

He also proposed to the board a second survey project — an audit of boarding homes where housekeeping units are provided, especially for the aged, and which do not come under the Community Care Facilities Licensing Act.

Deteriorating accommodation for elderly people on their own can be a health problem in many cases, the board was told, one that is of unknown size but centred in the core of Victoria.

The board decided that the problem be outlined to city manager Bill Hoosen to take to his council together with the health board proposals for dealing with it.

Confidence Crisis Seen for Education

Education today appears to be experiencing a crisis in public confidence, says Tom Elwood, Saanich school district director of instruction.

"I cannot over-emphasize the seriousness of this issue" Elwood told the board Tuesday.

"Eroding public support for education can make a board's tasks to provide essential new facilities almost impossible."

He said schools are failing to publicize the good work accomplished and attention is being focussed disproportionately on problems.

"The public is provided with an unfair and unbalanced perspective on education."

Lack of communication between schools and their communities is no longer acceptable, said Elwood.

"Today our citizens want to know what is happening in schools and why."

Explaining that the public is sincerely concerned about changes taking place in the schools, Elwood urged a greater effort be made to help the community appreciate such changes.

"The school cannot exist in a vacuum, it must be part of its community and responsive to the needs and expectations of the community."

The district is already moving in the right direction, said Elwood.

"Our adult education program caters to almost 1,000 citizens each year. The works experience program for students, volunteer parent instructors and student participation in community projects such as Central Saanich trail construction illustrates this trend."

"The public and the teachers do not speak the same language," he suggested.

Trustees discussed the fact that many parents today are not in touch with the school system.

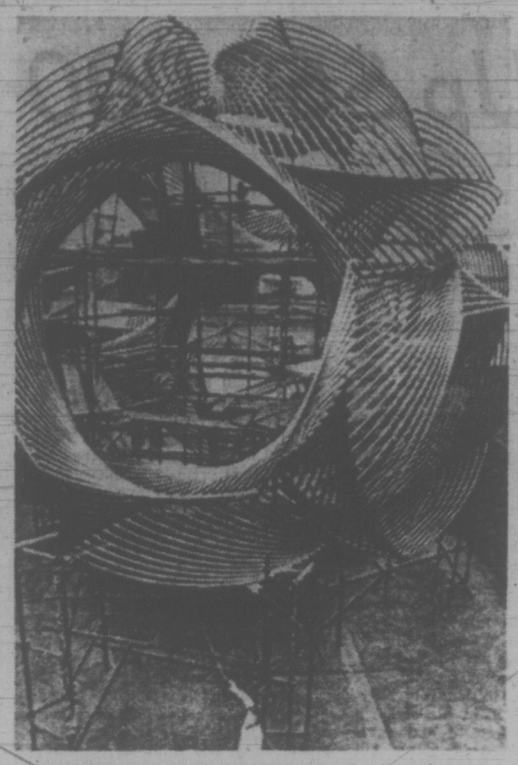
"We should let them know they are welcome," said Trustee Rubymay Parrott who advocates more "cultural afternoons" in which parents give instruction in their particular hobby.

Lortie Tries Escape In Montreal Court

MONTREAL (CP) — Bernard Lortie, serving 20 years for the October, 1970 kidnapping of former Quebec labor minister Pierre Laporte, attempted to escape today from the Montreal court where he had been called to testify at the second kidnapping trial of Jacques Rose.

Guards escorting Lortie removed his handcuffs before he entered the courtroom, he suddenly shoved them aside, called them a "bunch of dirty guys" and ran down a corridor where he was trapped by police.

He was returned to the courtroom where Rose is on trial in the kidnapping of Laporte.



GEOMETRIC SCULPTURE dwarfs American artist Charles Perry who designed the 35-foot work from more than a mile and half of aluminum tubing. The sculpture will be shipped to San Francisco where it will be erected at the new Embarcadero Centre Hotel.

Coast Historical Objects May Get Own Laboratory

Art gallery director Colin Graham and two officers from the Provincial Museum have been appointed to advise on establishing a west coast laboratory for conserving historic objects.

The federal project will eventually see five such regional laboratories across Canada and a headquarters lab in Ottawa.

Indications are the laboratory in B.C. will be located in Victoria although a Vancouver site is still a possibility.

Besides Graham, who is director of the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, Philip Ward, chief conservator of the Provincial Musuem, and John Kyte of the museum staff have been named to the advisory committee.

Other members are Mrs. Sheila Kincaid, director of the Burnaby Art Gallery; Mrs. Ursula Surtees, custodian of the Okanagan Museum and Archives Association at Kelowna and Gloria Webster, assistant curator, Museum of Anthropology at UBC.

The laboratories will specialize in restoration and preservation of everything from totem poles to paintings.

They are part of a new federal government effort to circulate the national cultural heritage through the country with a network of associate museums and national exhibition centres.

The newly-formed Canadian Conservation Institute will be headed by a director, Dr. Nathan Stolow, an art conservation specialist.

He has said that the Pacific laboratory, in addition to examining and preserving for the first time a whole range of both public and private collections, will deal with the rich heritage in B.C. of Indian and Eskimo cultural objects.

Reason for Terror

NEW YORK (Reuter) — The terrorist attack at the Munich Olympics which left 11 Israeli athletes dead may have been aimed at stopping direct, secret contacts between Israel and Egypt toward opening peace negotiations, the New York Times says.

In a dispatch from Paris, The Times, quoting an authoritative Western diplomatic source, says that Israel and Egypt agreed to the contacts slightly more than one week before the Palestinian attack in Munich. The source said it was the first time that neither nation had refused a proposal for a secret meeting.

The Times says no firm date had been set, as far as is known, but the guerrillas attacked the athletes to create an atmosphere in which such a meeting would be impossible.

The Times says Israeli foreign ministry officials in Jerusalem denied any such meeting had been arranged.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A man with $38,478 on deposit in his bank account was fined $500 for shoplifting by Judge William Ostler in provincial court Tuesday.

Hudson's Bay security supervisor Alexander Mortimer testified that John Auxi, of 1163 Johnson, was stopped as he was opening the trunk of his car after he was seen placing four knives and a knife sharpener in a paper bag Nov. 13.

He was wearing a leather coat that had been stolen a few minutes previous and a china horse was also found in the bag. The total value of the items was $170.78.

His bank deposit book was checked and the recorded balance was $38,478, said Mortimer.

Auxi told the court he had drunk 40 ounces of liquor before committing the offence.

Ostler said many people who appear in provincial court on shoplifting charges are in need of the items they have stolen, but the circumstances around Auxi's case indicated the standard fine was inappropriate.

The fine imposed was double the amount of the standard fine for shoplifting.

Three other shoplifters were fined $250 each.

Harold Hetherington, 61, of 188 Maddock, was apprehended by a Simpsons-Sears store security officer Nov. 13 after stealing two packages of drills worth a total of $2.98.

Elsie Lillian Sherman, of Duncan, was found to have $14 on her person when she was caught stealing items worth a total of $11.64 from Simpsons-Sears.

Alan Vernon Griffin, 59, of 3711 Palo Alto, was stopped by a Woodward's store security officer after he was seen in various departments placing items worth a total of $52.28 in a shopping bag.

A 22-year-old man was sentenced to six months in prison for breaking and entering and theft.

Wayne D. Shepherd, of no fixed address, was arrested Nov. 9 after breaking into a Victoria home and stealing a portable television set, valued at $175, and a clock radio, worth $60. He sold them for $45, police said.

A 58-year-old man was given a suspended sentence and a six-month probationary term for possession of a narcotic.

Prosecutor Robert Johnston said police attended at 620 Johnson, the business premises of Abraham Wise, following a report from a youth who said he believed Wise was in possession of some marijuana cigarettes Oct. 28.

When questioned, Wise produced a cigarette package containing 10 marijuana cigarettes.

Defence counsel Ted Pollard told the court Wise is a self-employed merchant, has an excellent work record, no criminal history, and the incident is "somewhat of an embarrassment."

★ ★ ★

A man serving 21 days for possession of hashish was sentenced to 45 days for breach of probation.

David John Petrie, 24, was placed on probation Aug. 7, 1972 after being convicted of possession of stolen property in Sidney provincial court.

On Nov. 3 he was convicted of possession of hashish and therefore violated his probation by "failing to keep the peace and be of good behavior."

In traffic court, four persons, Robert Lloyd McGill, 54, of 6-352 Gorge Road East; Freda Ball, 53, of 896 Falaise; Margaret Mary Johnson, 28, of 1162 Kings; and Peter M. Mazur, 43 of 912 Market, were each fined $350 for impaired driving by Judge Harold Alder.

8 Facing Execution

ACCRA, Ghana (AP) — Eight persons convicted on conspiracy charges were sentenced Tuesday to execution by firing squad.

The eight, including a senior law lecturer at the University of Ghana, and the press secretary of deposed Prime Minister Kofi Busia, were found guilty by a military tribunal of subversion, conspiracy to commit subversion and concealment of subversion.

A ninth person was convicted on the third count only and faces a prison sentence of up to 30 years.

The trial followed an alleged coup aimed at deposing the ruling National Redemption Council which came to power in a coup of its own Jan. 13.

Many Questions; Trading Cautious As Victorians Ponder Tax-Loss Rule

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

The questions are brisk but the trading is cautious at Victoria investment houses as Canada's first capital gains tax year nears a climax.

At Richardson Securities Ltd., Victoria manager H. J. Kennedy said questions continue to come in every day but there has been little tax loss trading so far.

"Most of the questions start: What would happen if I sold . . .? Not many of them are planning to take any action this time."

Kennedy said he anticipates a brisk tax loss selling season at the end of 1973 after a year's experience with the new system.

"Over the long haul the capital gains tax should have little effect on the market volume. New York has had capital gains taxes for years and the volume of trading is still very heavy there."

Wall Street is settling in to its heavy tax loss selling season this week.

In Canada the new laws make it mandatory that a personselling for tax loss purposes must wait 31 days before buying the same stock back.

Taxable capital gains are open-ended but allowable deductions for tax losses are not. Only a maximum of $1,000 can be charged against income from stock losses in any one year.

Rules for stocks purchased and sold within the calendar year 1972 are quite simple.

Take, for example, the portfolio of Joseph Smith who in March of this year bought 1,000 shares of a company for a total price of $10,000.

Original cost	$10,000
Proceeds of sale	$12,000
Capital gain	$2,000
Taxable gain	$1,000

Only 50 per cent of capital gains are subject to taxation. The taxable gain is added to other taxable income before computing tax payable.

If before year's end Joseph Smith sells his 1,000 shares at a loss, say for $8,000, then the result would be as follows:

Original cost	$10,000
Proceeds of sale	$8,000
Capital loss	$2,000
Allowable loss	$1,000

This $1,000 is the maximum Joseph Smith is permitted to deduct. If he lost even more on the sale, no additional tax solace would have been derived. If he sells at $7,000, for example, the result is:

Original cost	$10,000
Proceeds of sale	$7,000
Capital loss	$3,000
Allowable loss	$1,000

The original cost includes the price of the stock, commissions charged on the sale, interest on any loan arranged for the sole purpose of completing the purchase and any other necessary expenses incurred in the purchase.

Taxable gain is always 50 per cent of capital gain.

Allowable loss is always 50 per cent of capital loss except the allowable loss can never be more than $1,000 in any calendar year.

These trades involve valuation day and the median rule.

Dec. 22, 1971, has been declared as valuation day for common and preferred shares, rights, warrants and convertible shares publicly traded in Canada.

As a result the investor has three prices to deal with: the purchasing price, valuation day price and selling price. The cost is considered to be the middle number (the median rule).

For example, in 1971 Joseph Smith purchased 1,000 shares of a company for a total cost of $10,000. On valuation day the value was rated as $12,000.

If he sells the shares for $14,000, his computation would be as follows:

Original cost	$10,000
Valuation day	$12,000
Proceeds of sale	$14,000
Calculation:
Proceeds of sale	$14,000
Allowable cost	$12,000
Capital gain	$2,000
Taxable gain	$1,000

Allowable cost is the middle number of $10,000, $12,000 and $14,000.

If he sells the shares for $8,000 his computation would be:

Original cost	$10,000
Valuation day	$12,000
Proceeds of sale	$8,000
Calculation:
Proceeds of sale	$8,000
Allowable cost	$10,000
Capital loss	$2,000
Allowable loss	$1,000

Again, the allowable cost is the middle value of the three original numbers $10,000, $12,000 and $8,000.

In the event Joseph Smith sells his shares for $11,000, the median rule produced the following interesting result:

Original cost	$10,000
Valuation day	$12,000
Proceeds of sale	$11,000
Calculation:
Proceeds of sale	$11,000
Allowable cost	$11,000
result	nil

Allowable cost is always the middle number of the three original prices. When the proceeds of the sale are between original cost and valuation day value, the result for tax purposes is always nil — no taxable gain, no allowable loss.

The effect of the median rule is to reduce the impact of capital gains and losses involving stocks purchased prior to the first of this year.

Some accountants have wondered why the government did not simply declare that purchases prior to 1972 would not be subject to taxation and save all the complex calculations — however it is the law of the land.

The median rule provides one giant loophole for those whose stocks were unusually high on valuation day.

For example, if Joseph Smith prior to this year purchased shares at a cost of $8,000 that rose to $12,000 on valuation day he could be in an advantageous position.

Supposing he is able to sell at $11,500, then the following would apply:

Original cost	$8,000
Valuation day	$12,000
Proceeds of sale	$11,500
Calculation:
Proceeds of sale	$11,500
Allowable cost	$11,500
Taxable income	nil

In this instance Joseph Smith would have made a capital gain of $3,500 that was not subject to tax, thanks to the median rule.

B.C. Packers

British Columbia Packers Ltd. reports net income for the first nine months of 1972 of $2.15 million or $3.62 a share, compared with net income of $1.65 million or $2.77 a share for the comparable period of 1971.

Sales for the first nine months of 1972 were $83.1 million, compared with $71.1 in the first nine months of 1971.

CP

Canadian Pacific Ltd. reports total earnings of $66.6 million, or 89 cents a share, for the first nine months of 1972 compared with $54.7 million, or 73 cents a share, for the corresponding period of 1971.

The company attributed the increase to greater traffic volume in its various subsidiaries and consolidation of some operations.

Canadian Breweries

Canadian Breweries Ltd. reports third-quarter net earnings of $2,517,000 or 9.1 cents a share, down from $3,079,000 or 11.6 cents in the corresponding 1971 period.

Sales for the three-month period ended Sept. 30 were $113,573,000, down from $116,330,000 in the comparative period a year earlier.

Chairman John Devlin said Tuesday that the decrease in sales and earnings occurred primarily in the United States where the subsidiary Carling Brewing Co. Inc. reported a sales decline of 13.5 per cent for the quarter.

PHONE HIKES? NOT AT PRESENT

B.C. Tel has "no plans at present" for increasing the pay telephone rate to 20 cents from 10 cents to match rates proposed for eastern Canada.

Bell Canada is applying to the Canadian Transport Commission to move to the 20 cent rate in October, 1974.

For Bell Canada it is part of an across the board request for rate increases.

B.C. Tel also has "no plans at present" to apply for a general rate increase, a company spokesman said in Vancouver.

On Nov. 5 the CTC gave B.C. Tel permission to alter its rate structure but this was not defined as a rate increase. The shuffle brought B.C. Tel's long distance charges in line with those of Bell Canada.

Now, however, Bell Canada rates will rise above those in B.C., if the new rate structure is approved.

"Our rates are not influenced by what Bell Canada does," the B.C. Tel spokesman said.

However, in past B.C. Tel rates have been comparable to those in eastern Canada.

Wallpaper Revival Hits Paint Sales

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's paint manufacturers, still recovering from poor sales stretching from 1969 to 1971, are facing a competitor they thought was beaten years ago wallpaper.

"For a number of years, particularly the early years—following the war, it practically went out of existence," David E. Burnham, new president of the Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association, said recently.

"In more recent years there has been a rapid growth in the use of wallpaper and this has competed with paint."

Other wall coverings, such as wood panelling and wall board, also compete with paint.

Mr. Burnham said changes in the paint industry take about five years.

"In other words products that are on the market now were not on the market five years ago and will not be on the market five years from now."

SALES INCREASING

Despite these problems, Mr. Burnham said the industry is experiencing rising sales and profits without increasing prices out of proportion.

"The increases in prices over the years have been quite low. The successful company is one that can sell high-quality products at a fair price."

The association also is setting goals to increase involvement with government officials at both the federal and provincial levels.

Mr. Burnham, general manager, paints, Canadian Industries Ltd. of Montreal, said the association has been involved in past years with several areas of federal legislation, including hazardous products and packaging and labelling.

"In these areas, significant input from the industry is important. We have so many paint manufacturers scattered so widely, the only means of communication to the government is through the association."

Another objective of the association is to set up committees to act on a provincial level.

The most important provinces for this, said Mr. Burnham, are Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia and Manitoba, which have the largest concentration of paint manufacturers.

THE
MEDAL

John McCrae's "In Flanders Field" remains to this day the most memorable tribute ever written to Man's Heroism and Sacrifice.

In simple commemoration of the 100th Anniversary of the birth of Canada's Heroic Soldier-Poet, the Colonel John McCrae Medal is offered to Canadians who wish to honor his memory in a form at once tangible and appropriate.

It establishes, at this time, an heirloom to be cherished for generations to come.

The Colonel John McCrae Medal will be issued only in this single, limited edition and only in proof quality Sterling Silver. It is available for $10.00 and the profits will go to The Col. John McCrae Birthplace Society, Guelph, Ontario.

Minting will be by the Wellings Mint, Canada's Foremost Private Mint. The facilities can be made available at no charge for a limited period only, so all medal applications must be postmarked by November 30—fittingly, the 100th Anniversary of Colonel John McCrae's birthday.

Firms Must Set Specific Objectives

Canada is now entering a period when her future prosperity will be determined by the ability to export not only raw material but also semi-manufactured and manufactured goods.

Great strains are being placed on this export drive by such factors as the suggested DISC (Domestic Internal Sales Corporation) in the U.S., and the approaching parity with the U.S. dollar.

Within this present uncertain economic climate and period of declining corporate profits it is vital that management makes use of all available techniques to improve its competitive position and bolster its profits.

Over the past several years, there has been a great deal of discussion about "management by objectives" and its role in industry. Although the system has been widely practised for many years, it is not universally accepted.

It has been tried and rejected by some companies because it failed to provide the benefits expected of it, while in others it has not yet been tried or is only now being introduced.

Management by objectives is the establishment of a number of specific and measurable objectives for each position within a company.

These objectives are over and above the normal "meet the budget" objective that is part of everybody's job. They are closely related to and derived from the long range plan for the company as a whole or its various component units.

ROLE IN MARKETING

The first and major function of management by objectives is to improve the profitability of a company by increasing the effectiveness of the marketing division. This can be accomplished by reducing unit costs or by increasing sales without proportionally increasing costs.

It results in a system where progress can be monitored by management to ensure that the results being achieved closely approximate corporate goals.

The second major purpose of such a program is to provide senior management with an equitable means of assessing the performance of both staff and junior management. Too often such assessments are based on subjective, qualitative judgments as no objective, quantitative techniques are available.

The satisfactory application of a "management by objectives" program will enable management to identify more accurately those making a significant contribution to corporate goals and who are capable of further assisting the company by entering or climbing the management structure.

These two basic functions hold true regardless of the division of the company to which they are applied. However, they are especially critical for marketing.

No matter how brilliant the research scientists or how efficient the production unit, if a company does not have a marketing group that is able to provide the consumer with the product he wants, where he wants it and at a price he is prepared to pay, that company will never succeed.

It is important to remember that a "management by objectves" program is a means to an end—increased profitability—and not an end in itself. Such programs fail too frequently because of a lack of appreciation of this point.

Management by objectives is merely a management tool, as are other techniques such as discounted cash flow, critical path analyses and decision trees. The tools are designed to enable managers to make the right decision at the right time.

Objectives based on the most current information available must be revised whenever major parameters change or as other new information becomes available. Flexibility in controlling the system is a prime requirement for success.

Objectives should be specific, not general. Fuzzy objectives usually beget fuzzy results. Objectives should not state only that sales must be increased, or costs cut—they should say by how much. No doubt should be left as to what the objective really is.

Objectives should be set in a positive way so that the result of an achieved objective is a direct improvement in the company's competitive position. However, while objectives should be positive, they should also be realistic.

An objective to develop a particular market should only be set if that market is known to exist. If not, the initial objective should be to establish whether such a market exists and then once that fact is established, a second objective can be set to define and develop that market in an approved manner.

Unrealistic objectives can prove demoralizing to the assigned person. Given an objective to develop a particular market, an employee who demonstrated that no such market existed would be judged to have failed his objective, even though he actually would have saved his company much time and money by his results.

On the other hand, the attainment of realistic objectives should demonstrate to the employee his position as an individual profit centre within the company and should result in an increase in his motivation to succeed.

'Coup of Terror' Feared at UN

By ANTHONY ASTRACHAN
Washington Post

UNITED NATIONS — "In their warped minds, Munich was a coup," said one of the anonymous men who guard the UN building in New York, musing on the Palestinian guerrilla attack at the Olympics in September, in which 11 Israeli athletes died.

"What's the biggest event since Munich? The U.N. general assembly. One hundred and one foreign ministers. What a coup that would be."

With no specifics to watch for, the security men try to be ready for anything, from an assault on the big glass building to a slashed tire on a diplomatic car. Security measures can be as serious as X-raying mail to see if a letter is a bomb or as trivial as telling U.S. staff members not to have their wives in to lunch. The effort involves at least six U.S. agencies, the U.N. security force and the New York police department.

Immigration rules have been tightened, for instance, and the FBI has paid a lot of attention to the thousands of Arabs clustered around Atlantic Avenue in Brooklyn, many of them American citizens — as well as to Arab concentrations in other cities like Detroit.

Dr. Mohammed T. Mehdi, a New York spokesman for the Palestinian cause, called the security process a witchhunt against Arabs and said: "Zionist terrorism against the Arabs is a greater menace to American society and its Arab community than any possible Palestinian terrorism."

The militant Jewish Defense League has in fact been relatively quiet, but a Jewish student from training camp and arsenal reportedly operate near New York in case the Israelis want to mount their own counter-terror here as they are said to plan to do in Germany, Italy and Austria.

The security men seem more worried about Arab do-it-yourself security: a few Arab diplomats, worried about reprisals for Munich, started carrying guns for self-defense — in some cases, right into the general assembly.

The Israelis' security seems more professional: the Israeli U.N. mission makes you stand outside its locked door while you identify yourself through an intercome and are inspected by closed-circuit television. When the Israeli security man is satisfied, you are admitted.

Once you are inside the mission, a blue-trousered, white-capped officer from the lice force." Koch plans to U.S. Executive Protection Service notes your name and checks your credentials for his own purposes. The EPS, an arm of the secret service that protects embassies in Washington, has about 40 men in New York to help the city's police handle security during the general assembly.

Rep. Edward Koch (D.—N.Y.) introduced a bill in the last congress to provide federal protection for the 200 U.N. missions and foreign consulates here, and for consulates in all other American cities. It died in the public works committee because the Nixon administration opposed the creation of a "federal po- reintroduce the bill in the 93rd congress.

In the meantime, the 19th precinct on Manhattan's Upper East Side has an "embassy squad" of 63 men, all volunteers, for special duty guarding missions and diplomats' residences.

Capt. Daniel McGowan, the commander of the 19th precinct, says that one of his biggest problems is the Soviet U.N. mission, located directly across 67th street from his precinct house. (The precinct house was there first; it was built in 1887.) For example, when Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko was here early in October, McGowan had 113 men assigned to protect him and the mission. Normally he uses 24 men for the job, eight at a time around the clock.

FINGER LOST

Since the death of an Israeli expert from a mail bomb in London, at least six mail bombs have been discovered in New York. Only one exploded, on Oct. 14, blowing a finger off the hand of a postal clerk who was trying to reseal the open flap on an envelope when it exploded. The letter bomb was addressed to a former national officer of Hadassah, a Jewish women's organization.

DRY TORONTONIANS VOTE

TORONTO (CP)—Residents of west Toronto, which has been without liquor stores, and bars since 1903, will decide Dec. 4 whether the area will stay dry.

The dry campaign is being led by William Temple, vice-president of the West Toronto Inter-Church Temperance Federation of which nearly all area churches are members.

Mr. Temple predicts an easy win for the dry campaign and said many members of the area's ethic community are supporting him.

"The priest at one church . . . has promised an 80 per cent dry vote," said Mr. Temple.

The wet campaign organizers predict 75 per cent of the 40,000 voters will support their campaign.

The pro-liquor campaign is being led by 20 businessmen, many of them restaurant or hotel owners, who say liquor will mean better business.

Jack Altman, a hotel owner, said, "The bootleggers are having a picnic" and will continue to have one if the drys win the campaign.

Mr. Temple said, however, it will be the "rubbydubs" who will have the picnic if liquor is allowed.

The last liquor vote was in 1966 when the wets won by 5,198 to 3,295 votes.

Ecology, Economics Meeting Needed

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — The worlds of ecology and economics must come together to ensure the survival of society, Maurice Strong, secretary-general of the United Nations conference on human environment, said Tuesday.

Mr. Strong, the first lecturer in a series on sociental management at the University of Guelph, said the processes of power and resources—economic, social and political— have brought mankind to the brink of an environmental dilemma.

The Manitoba native said he believes the UN has a strong claim to leadership on a worldwide scale in such areas as regulation and control of the oceans and the population explosion.

He said such control should not be thought of in the context of a society molded in the fashion of George Orwell's 1984 but that it would have to be "a degree of management and control on a higher level than anything we have yet experienced."

He said the only alternative he could foresee was anarchy, chaos and ultimate disintegration.

Mr. Strong, president of the Canadian International Development Agency until he assumed his position with the UN in 1970, said that any lingering doubt of the importance of environmental pollution on a global scale was removed by the UN conference on human environment in Stockholm in June.

SEES PARADOX

At the conference, both developed and underdeveloped nations recognized the dangers inherent in air and water pollution, congestation, noise, traffic problems and destruction of natural and recreational areas by industrialization and urbanization.

He added that one of the great paradoxes of contemporary society "is the need for development to bring a fair share of life to the Third World" to maintain it in an industrialized society while such development poses a threat to society through pollution.

"Another paradox is that at a time of co-operation and unity in the world, we are witnessing a reversion to nationalism when we can least afford it," he said.

U.K. Attempt At Everest Abandoned

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — A British expedition's attempt to put the first Briton on top of Mount Everest has been abandoned because of bad weather, a radio message received here disclosed today.

The brief report from the 11-man team said they were unable to go beyond 27,000 feet because of "hard and strong winds."

The climbers were attempting to scale the unconquered southwest face of the 29,028-foot mountain, the world's highest. Although a British expedition made the first ascent of Everest, the two men who reached the top were a New Zealander, Sir Edmund Hillary, and a Nepalese Sherpa, Tenzing Norgay.

MOUNTIE IMAGE CREATED BY PEOPLE

TORONTO (CP)—The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police said Tuesday the Canadian people, not his force, created the Mountie image which has become known throughout the world.

W. L. Higgitt, head of Canada's largest police force, said the force did not seek to become the symbol of Canada. "We are proud, but it puts a terrible responsibility on us," he said.

Mr. Higgitt was speaking during a ceremony in which he was presented with two paintings by Norman Smith, president of International Harvester Co. of Canada Ltd. to mark the force's 100th anniversary in 1973.

"I believe most policemen, and that includes all forces, are dedicated to serve," said Mr. Higgitt, whose force consists of 12,000 men. "It is certainly not the praise or the sometimes dreadful working conditions, but the desire to serve that make them join."

FBI Director Admits Ordering Tire Shootout

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The acting director of the FBI said here Tuesday that the controversial decision to shoot out the tires on a hijacked Southern Airways jetliner Saturday in Orlando, Fla., was his decision.

"It was obvious that the crew and passengers were under considerable tension," he said, noting that the plane had made six landings in the United States, one in Toronto and one in Cuba before the tires were shot out.

Gray said the action was successful in that it "caused the plane to land and the passengers to be released." He said the hijackers planned to take the plane to Switzerland or Africa and their destination was impossible with the tires shot out. The plane eventually landed a second time in Cuba, where the passengers and and crew were released.

"I made the decision to abort the flight with the full concurrence of Southern Airways," acting director Patrick Gray said at a news conference Tuesday.

"I elected the means to do it," Gray said, adding that airline officials concurred because of the "risk" involved.

Gray was asked about reports that the shooting order originated with President Nixon, who was at his residence in Key Biscayne, Fla., at the time.

VANCOUVER MAYOR'S TRIAL SET

VANCOUVER (CP) — A trial date of Jan. 11 was set in provincial court Tuesday for Mayor Tom Campbell, the police commission and two police officers of failing to grant two clerks four hours to vote on Oct. 30, as required under the Election Act.

Campbell, police commissioners Graham Dawson, Arthur Johnson and Alan Eyre and Sergeant Alec Bellman and Staff Sergeant Reno Cristofoli are charged with directly or indirectly interfering on Oct. 30 with granting Mary Whebby and Valerie McMillan four hours to vote.

Canuck Brass Bound Over

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thomas Scallen and Lyman Walters, top management of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League, were committed for trial Tuesday on charges of theft and issuing a false prospectus.

Scallen is president and Walters vice-president of Medical Investment Corp. Ltd. of Minneapolis, which controls the Canucks through a 60-per-cent holding in Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd., immediate parent company of the Canucks.

Both hold similar positions with Northwest Sports.

Scallen was committed for trial on a charge of theft of $3 million by converting the money from Northwest Sports to Medicor, and on a charge of issuing a false prospectus to induce the public to purchase shares in Northwest Sports.

Scallen and Walters both elected trial by judge and jury when they appeared before provincial court Judge David Moffett Sept. 18. Judge Moffett ordered that evidence taken at the preliminary hearing not be published.

They were charged Feb. 22 after an investigation by the British Columbia Securities Commission.

Results of the investigation were turned over to Vancouvtr lawyer Ray Paris by the then attorney-general, Leslie Peterson, in October, 1971.

The preliminary hearing was long delayed, with the defence winning a series of adjournments before the hearing finally began.

The adjournments were protested by Paris. No date for a trial has been set.

Immediate Cleanup Urged

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Environmental Council, in a brief to the federal and provincial governments, has called for an immediate start on intensive anti-pollution studies and the upgrading of plans for sewage treatment plants on the Fraser River estuary.

The council says it is a matter of some urgency that the two levels of government cooperate to declare the Fraser a water quality management area, as provided under the Canada Water Act.

The brief also recommends the establishment of greenbelts, wildlife preserves and wilderness areas on islands in the estuary and a review of waterfront and log-booming licences with a view to providing a public green strip along the river's edge.

It asks that further industrial development in the lower Fraser valley be approved only after an environmental and social impact statement has been prepared by the department of transport.

It also asks for a federally-sponsored public hearing into a deepsea port proposed for the Fraser and a DOT statement outlining the need for deepsea facilities and alternate sites.

Red-Hunter Dead at 71

LUFKIN, Tex. (AP) — Martin Dies, 71, who hunted subversives in government during seven stormy years as the first chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives committee on un-American activities, died Tuesdy night of a heart attack.

The burly Texan spent more than 20 years in Congress.

After shifting the focus of the committee from investigation of Nazi subversives to Communists in the late 1930s, Dies often stirred controversy and commanded newspaper headlines.

A Cancer of Loneliness —The Way of a Suicide

A remark attributed to the poetess, Pauline Johnson, which helps to explain her stoicism and serenity in the last years of her life when she was desperately ill with cancer, now comes to mind. "Get out, whatever the weather," she told a friend. "It's the only way to cure the blues."

I've been wondering if perhaps the Mohawk Princess may not have meant it in a broader sense than simply to explain her daily walks, rain or shine, in Stanley Park, if perhaps she wasn't referring to the need to get out of oneself, whatever the weather of the spirit.

It's a thought that occurs as the result of watching the Public Broadcasting Service's chilling documentary on the subject of suicide in the western world, a program that noted, among other sad statistics, that 20,000 Canadians will try to take their own lives this year and that one in every 10 will succeed only too well.

There was a common denominator in these accounts of personal experience with despair. It was loneliness. With one or two exceptions we were seeing people whose problems were magnified by a kind of self-imposed solitary confinement, both physically and mentally. The men in particular (more women, it seems, attempt suicide than men, but more men succeed) described conditions of such absolute defeat that they invited self-destruction. Yet many of the problems were minor ones that had become an obsession.

It seemed clear throughout the program that there are vast numbers of men and women who destroy themselves because they've persisted in a frontal struggle against their troubles, which then seem insurmountable, when they might have escaped or circumvented them by simply walking away, "whatever the weather."

If this is true, if people withdraw to brood over and unwittingly inflate their often commonplace failures or disappointments, then it may be that many suicides may be attributed not to specific difficulties, but to loneliness itself.

Just as solitary confinement in our penal system is considered the most intolerable, torturing punishment, so its effects as a private sentence may have lethal results.

Loneliness, in this sense, is not synonymous with aloneness. Some of my closest friends are old-age pensioners who live by themselves. They lead happy, purposeful lives with only the occasional luxury of companionship. Most, indeed, prefer that way of life.

They're alone as, in fact, Pauline most often was, but far from lonely. They have their gardens, the endless projects about their houses, their fishing, their hobbies, their books, their memories. These interests, along with independence and pride, are very often workable substitutes, by choice, for social encounters.

My father, who knew her well in her last years, told me that Pauline, herself, was "strangely alone," yet she possessed an unconquerable spirit that sustained her.

But the man or woman who goes into solitude gathering his problem close to himself, bruised and battered as an animal entering a cave to tend his wounds, finds neither solutions nor contentment. The problem that caused him to retreat is then compounded by loneliness itself. A new and greater burden is added to that special, localized hurt that began the exile.

This is a loneliness that may grip a man though he is in the crowd, though he goes through the motions of normal living, and is a kind of cancer in itself.

The condition of irrationality or self-pity or the aberrations of guilt that cause people to destroy themselves would seem to come as much from this sort of secret torment as it does from the more isolated causes for the abandonment of all hope.

Thus when a woman on the program expressed the opinion that society shouldn't try to stand in the suicide's way, that she is an example of one who "simply could never make the grade" and regularly contemplates self-destruction, it seemed clear that she'd reached this dismal conclusion through an attitude of loneliness, of living so closely with her illusion of failure and nourishing it with sorrow, that it had become a form of insanity.

It seems impossible to communicate sensibly with such a person, to console her with the fact that no one really "makes the grade" to perfection, to assure her that the sun is really bright and constant behind the artificial clouds that are so largely of her creation.

Loneliness, then, may be the greatest barrier, a mere state of mind yet impenetrable, the last giant step to the point of no return. How many, I wonder, would have gone on to enjoy the gift of life if they'd take Pauline's way instead?

'Perfect Fall'

Last month was the driest in 61 years and the sunniest since 1952 and for the most part the weather pattern is continuing this month, he said.

While some intense storms have been brewed in the north Pacific, they have been deflected north and south of Vancouver Island and unseasonably good weather is expected to continue for "a day or two."

FAULTY WIRING BLAMED FOR FIRE

Fire started by faulty wiring caused an estimated $8,000 damage Tuesday to the home of Warren D. Craig, 1327 Carnsew.

Victoria deputy fire chief R. J. (Carl) Coates, said wiring attached to a sewing machine caused the fire to start on the floor of a spare bedroom. It spread to the wall and the dresser adjacent to the wall.

"There was heavy smoke damage to the rest of the house," said Coates.

Zeller's Sets Review Of Holiday Openings

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A senior officer of Zeller's stores today said the chain will review its policy after being criticized for doing business in Victoria on three recent public holidays.

William W. Tinmouth, company secretary and general counsel in Montreal, commented on criticism by Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis who called for public censure of Zeller's, particularly for being open Remembrance Day.

"Perhaps we should be more sensitive to Remembrance Day in a city like Victoria where the population is much older and more cognizant of what the day signifies," Tinmouth said.

He said store hours are generally a local management responsibility and usually they follow statutory holidays. He said he did not know the circumstances with regard to the Victoria branch store being open Labor Day and Thanksgiving Day, the two other holidays referred to by Curtis.

Earlier criticism had come from Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan, who deplored the flouting of Remembrance Day and Labor Day.

Tinmouth said "Zeller's, in opening its store those three days in Victoria was perhaps not sufficiently sensitive to local feeling."

He wanted to check further with the store manager and regional vice-president of Zeller's, noting that store hours vary from one city to another and are usually governed by municipal bylaws.

Remembrance Day, Thanksgiving and Labor Day are three of the nine public holidays declared by the Municipal Act as store closing days in B.C.

Curtis had called for measures by the community to "let management know we object to this very strongly."

He accused Zeller's of deliberately eroding or ignoring all major holidays and said it was time the community "stood up on our own feet" to say that was "not OK in Victoria."

Jobs Not Flowers Says Labor Chief

The decline of industry in Greater Victoria should be met by creation of an industrial development commission and greater public awareness of the importance of jobs, Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan said Tuesday.

"The conventional outlook of Victoria is slanted towards flowers and fountains," he said. "Jobs are one of the most important parts of the community."

While there was no specific outcome from the "round table" discussion at the meeting, Ryan said Hempsall promised he would look into the whole subject.

"We all noted the lack of an industrial development commission in the region and there do not seem to be any sites marked out and very little is done about it," Ryan said after meeting Hempsall.

"There was agreement that very little is being done about developing industrial sites in the region, there is not much emphasis on this. We explored ways and means to trigger more active interest in industrial development."

Not only does the community not seem to be vitally interested in this, said Ryan, but "it is not high on the priorities of municipal and regional government in this area."

Trustee Explodes Over Doctor's Bill

A general practitioner has billed Greater Victoria school board $100 for his appearance before a board investigating the firing of two tenured teachers.

"Here's a $50,000 a year salary bracket man screwing the board for a fee in what to my mind is a citizenship thing," Bunn told a business committee meeting Tuesday night.

Bunn said he saw Dr. D. M. Whitley for only an hour or two at the five-day October board of reference hearing into the firing of teachers Evelyn Ball and Bona McMurchie.

Bunn told the committee he took a whole day off his contracting business because he wanted to be informed on the new proceedings involved in the newly-set up avenue of appeal for teachers.

"It seems this doctor can't spare a couple of hours of his time to perform what seems to me a civic service," Bunn said. "It's amoral."

Trustee Carron Jameson, a dentist, said he thought $100 was a standard minimum fee for a GP's appearance in court as an expert witness.

In the October hearing, Whitley testified that he must have been "facetious" when he told the two teachers, who claimed they both had influenza, they should go to Arizona.

The appeal board reinstated the teachers following the hearing, with the explanation that failure to obtain leave of absence could not be regarded as neglect of duty on the part of teachers who were ill.

The school board has appealed the decision.

Smoke Dealers 'Wait and See'

Imperial Tobacco Products Ltd. announced an increase in the wholesale price of cigarettes last week and predicted that it would mean an increase of about two cents a package.

Only one local department store and one small grocery store surveyed were emphatic about their plans to raise the package cost of cigarettes "probably one or two cents."

Most other stores said they planned to wait and see what their competitors did.

Two vending companies in the city said they had raised the cost of a package to 60 cents several months ago in anticipation of rising wholesale costs.

A third company, whose machines had still been collecting 55 cents a package, said it would raise its prices within the next two weeks.

One tobacco store owner said the rising prices presented him with a dilemna since he faced department and grocery store competitors who could cover rising costs in other ways and not raise their retail cigarette prices.

"We can't do that, because we only sell tobacco," he said, "and if we don't raise our prices we'll suffer a loss."

Another grocery store owner said the price war was forcing him to sell below a profitable level now and the new prices would make it even more difficult for him.

"We're subsidizing the tobacco industry as it is," he said. "We could never make enough just selling cigarettes."

Most retail outlets are selling a regular cigarette package for 51 or 52 cents and a carton of 10 packages for $4.60 to $4.70.

Several retailers in town said they have never been formally notified of the increase in price, which is to be effective Nov. 20, and are puzzled that the media was informed without their knowledge.

Expenditure of $1M Needed on Vic High

Victoria Secondary School needs $1 million spent on it soon.

"That's what we're talking about to bring the school up to 1973 standards," Trustee Peter Bunn told Greater Victoria school board's school support committee Tuesday night.

"It's a most important school. How are we going to make it enjoyable to go there?" asked Trustee Daphne Temple.

An administration report showed that lighting in the school's hallways was as much as a quarter the required standard.

The report said the school building is "in serious need of a substantial overhaul to its main service systems, fire and science safety and functional surface areas."

Plumbing, electrics, heating, science equipment, classrooms are "worn out," the report said.

Fire safety is also unsatisfactory, the report said, with the fire chief seeking improvements.

The school building has been a drain on school district funds, with "considerably higher" maintenance costs than other schools since 1956.

"As an average, this school board has spent over $33,000 per year on school maintenance and $3,500 per year on painting," the report said.

Estimated maintenance projects for 1973 amount to $47,000.

Bunn said that in considering the $1 million figure it should be remembered that the building has a valuation of $3½ million.

The committee agreed to consider putting the sum in a 1974 building referendum.

Victoria Secondary School, at 1260 Grant, is generally considered a landmark. The building is more than half a century old, although the school has existed for nearly a century.

New Museum Sought For Antique Equipment

The ancient plows, threshers, steam-driven balers and other pioneer quipment belong to Saanich Historical Artifacts Society which is the only live "working museum" in B.C.

Shrieking steam engines and clanking tractors form a main attraction each year at Saanichton Fair and Society members put on frequent machine demonstrations for local school groups.

Willard Michell, society director and museum curator, has asked Central Saanich council to purchase two acres of land from the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society in order to build permanent exhibition barns.

Oldest piece of working machinery is an 1882 threshing machine. The barns also contain an elegant "democrat" buggy and several farm sleighs, in addition to the workaday equipment.

Central Saanich council has asked Michell to prepare a list of the Society's long-range plans in order to consider the requested land purchase.

ARBITRATION

Free bargaining between boards and staff, restored by the new provincial government this fall, had reached no agreement by the Nov. 14 deadline laid down by law.

Sooke district's 304 teachers vote on committee agreement tonight. If the vote fails, that contract will also be determined by arbitration.

In deciding salary increases, a provincially-appointed arbitrator takes into account awards made in industry and in school districts where agreement has been reached. The decision is announced by Dec. 31.

World Hockey: With the Co-operation of Whom?

Okay, who's the boss, and running the show for the proposed National Hockey League-Russia hockey series? Is it Clarence Campbell or Alan Eagleson? Or another sharpie?

Your remember Clarence Campbell? He's the president of the NHL. He said he believed the series of four games with Russia should be played, and against the best possible clubs.

"We can't pretend the Russians don't exist," he stated.

You remember Alan Eagleson, the walking disaster from Moscow? He's the president of the NHL Players Association, too. He said his association wasn't at all unanimous about playing the Russians again, and he disagreed with Campbell where the games, when scheduled, should be played.

"Some of the players felt we won the Russia-Canada series by the skin of our teeth, so why be hasty to take a chance on being put down to second place?" he said patriotically.

It might be better if the Soviet team met some of the lesser clubs, he added.

"If they beat our best, they can go home and say: 'we're the world's best.' If they beat Oakland, who cares?"

All that was mostly last week when the series was "on," and Campbell and Eagleson had scheduled a visit to Moscow to settle on final plans, "the series to be presented by the NHL, in co-operation with the Players Association." That was the official announcement.

Through Proper Channels, Please

Meanwhile Joe Kryczka of Calgary, president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, got into the act, and without due fanfare, by saying: "there is no way the CAHA is going to roll over and play dead" on the international scene."

He said he would be very surprised if the series was played unless the NHL and the NHLPA went through proper channels.

To which Eagleson countered in his best undiplomatic manner:

Kryczka had his other bombshell ready. He quoted a cable from Russia:

"USSR Ice Hockey Federation abides by all respective articles of statutes . . . regarding intense internal and international schedule, does not feel it possible to have games against professional teams season 1972-73."

To which Campbell and Eagleson obviously said: fie on the CAHA. Eagleson's words were . . . "a joint venture pursuant to an agreemeent . . . and does not involve any other organization . . ."

And so on . . . ad nausea.

So, there it was — a jurisdictional dispute with the CAHA apparently about to be shafted.

Now, suddenly, this week, the series is "off." Well, it's not exactly off, it's just that there has been a hang-up in negotiations, and Campbell and Eagleson have delayed their visit to Moscow.

Perhaps they should have rescheduled it to London. Because that is where the real hang-up exists. They know it. So do the Russians. So does the CAHA. Because there lives another wheeler-dealer.

It's Bunny's Turn to Deal

You remember Bunny?

He controls the destinies of the International Ice Hockey Federation, as president. And it's quite obvious that he has warned the Russians that to play the NHL without proper permission comes under the general heading of NYET.

And if they insist, one possible action the IIHF could take might threaten the holding of the international championships scheduled for Russia in 1973. (Thus the cable?)

Besides, it is usual policy for national hockey associations of countries involved to receive a share of profits from such promotions. The CAHA uses such funds for development programs. In addition, it wants to retain its status as Canada's representative in international play. So does the USAHA.

If the NHL and the Players Association have reiterated that see no need of involving these amateur groups in any international series, that, kiddies, is what the fuss is all about. Money!

Money, prestige and jurisdiction!

Sure, it is likely that the games will go on.

Campbell said it: "I think we have a moral obligation to play them (the Russians)." At least he was being honest.

But right now, it's Ahearne who holds most of the aces in the international card game. Besides, he wasn't invited to. He was to Russia. That hurt.

More important, now, he's dealing. And if any series is to be presented, it will be "in co-operation with whom."

Habs Rolling To Runaway

By The Canadian Press

You'd think Scotty Bowman had it all figured out at the start of the year.

"I think we've had a good training camp and we're very pleased with most of our rookies;" the Montreal Canadiens coach remarked of his club's chances in the forthcoming National Hockey League season. "With the mixture we should be a contender."

The Canadiens aren't just having a "good" season. They're dominating the NHL and Tuesday night's 7-2 victory over New York Islanders moved them seven points atop the East Division ahead of New York Rangers.

Elsewhere Tuesday, Minnesota North Stars beat Los Angeles 4-1 to continue their unbeaten string over the Kings that covers the last four seasons and Vancouver Canucks came from a three-goal deficit to tie Detroit Red Wings 3-3.

The Canadiens have been getting key games from several players to date, but their big shooter is Jacques Lemaire, a surprise in that he is one regular who didn't perform impressively in the preseason camp.

Lemaire scored his 15th goal of the season to give Montreal a 5-2 lead and Marc Tardif and Frank Mahovlich finished the rout at New York before more than 10,000 fans in Nassau Coliseum. Lemaire also picked up an assist to increase his NHL scoring lead to 28 points.

The Canadiens opened a 3-1 lead before veteran Ron Stewart, obtained earlier in the day from their cross-town rivals, the Rangers, scored on a power-play to bring the Islanders to within one.

First period goals by Danny Grant, Murray Oliver and J. P. Parise propelled the North Stars into a 3-0 lead at Minneapolis and they were ahead 4-0 before Ralph Backstrom ended Gump Worsley's bid for his 44th career shutout at 11:45 of the third period.

The Canucks took the play from Detroit in the final 40 minutes and capitalized on Red Wing penalties to even the count—rookie Don Lever scoring in the second and Boudrias in the third with the opposition short-handed.

The Flames' were scheduled to stop at Buffalo en route to Toronto, but they continued their flight after making three attempts to land during the area's first major snow storm.

Conditions weren't much better in Toronto but, after one abhorted landing attempt, their craft did touch down—much to the relief of Atlanta coach Bernie Geoffrion.

"Damned right it scared me," said the former NHL scoring star with Montreal and New York. "I hate flying anyhow, and we were going down, going up three times.

"Then the same thing at Toronto."

Wheaties on Target

By The Canadian Press

Brandon Wheat Kings made the most of their 15 shots Tuesday night to maintain partial possession of first place in the Eastern Division of the Western Canada Hockey League.

The visiting Wheat Kings converted five of their 15 shots into goals and dumped Edmonton Oil Kings 5-4 to stay in a tie with Saskatoon Blades for first place, each with 22 points.

In other games, Saskatoon extended its unbeaten streak to seven games with a 6-2 victory over Vancouver Nats, Medicine Hat Tigers downed New Westminster Bruins 4-2 and Regina Pats snapped a nine-game losing streak with a 7-6 home-ice victory over Winnipeg Jets.

Brandon needed a sparkling effort by goalie Wayne Wilhelm to preserve the win. With Edmonton holding a two-man advantage in the last minute of the third period, Wilhelm blocked a shot by Darcy Rota and then stopped Fred Comrie's rebound attempt.

Edmonton had the two-man advantage after Brandon's Rick Piche went off for holding and Oil Kings goalie Ed Soetaert was pulled.

Wilhelm, who replaced injured Jim Rankin in the opening period, also blocked a penalty shot by John Rogers in the third period.

Rota had two goals for the Oil Kings, who missed a chance to take over first spot in the Western Division. Terry McDonald and Randy Smith added single goals.

At Saskatoon, Russ Walker and Don McLeod scored two goals each for the Blades, with Ralph Klassen and Danny Arndt contributing single goals. Nick Fita and Sid Prysunka replied for Vancouver, in fifth place in the Western Division.

Regina's first win since Oct. 20 still left the team stuck in the Eastern-Division cellar with six points, seven behind fifth-place Winnipeg.

Track Group Gets Flowers

NEW YORK (AP) — Amateur stars Jim Ryun, Bob Seagren, Lee Evans and Randy Matson turned professional Tuesday as the nucleus of a track and field circuit that plans 48 meets next year in the United States, Canada and Europe.

Richmond Flowers of the National Football League's New York Giants, a former hurdles star at the University of Tennessee, also signed a contract, it was announced by the new International Track Association.

"We plan 24 to 30 events in North America," said Michael O,Haara, president of the new International Track Association, "and about 15 more in Europe.

The ITA format calls for up to 48 meets with basic purses of $10,800 each. There are to be two meets a week, one each on Saturday and Sunday, in cities that are close to one another.

"We will sign five athletes for each of 12 championship events," O'Hara said. "At each meet, the winner of an event will receive $300 with $250 for second, $100 for third and $50 for fourth."

Ryun said it had been projected to him that "a good year could be worth $18,000 and up at the beginning. That might not seem huge, but it is when you've been earning zero."

The former Kansas University world record holder in the mile said he foresees, "possible great financial benefits, as long as your name is hot in the news, in such areas as endorsements and commercials."

O'Hara said that Flowers, who makes an estimated $25,000 yearly in the National Football League, "contacted us about running since track was his first sports love."

The ITA president said he was, however, "treading cautiously in talking deals with pro football players. We want to play ball with the clubs and the NFL.

"But, for sure, we are interested in such people as Bob Hayes, Paul Warfield, Mercury Morris, Earl McCullogh and Jimmy Hines, who were track heroes as well as good football players."

O'Hara released a partial 1973 schedule which included Albuquerque, N.M., March 23; Los Angeles, March 24; Fort Worth, Tex., April 6; Baltimore, April 14; Chicago, May 4; Atlanta, May 5; Philadelphia, May 11; Pittsburgh, May 12; Vancouver, May 18; San Diego, May 19; Louisville, Ky., June 1; Richmond, Va., June 2; Long Island, N.Y., June 9.

He said ITA meets are also to be scheduled for New York, Orlando, Fla., Oakland, Cleveland, Seattle, Dallas, Toronto and Montreal.

Sharks Play It Rough And Jets Go to Town

By The Canadian Press

Los Angeles Sharks have only themselves to blame for Tuesday night's 8-0 humiliation by Winnipeg Jets.

The World Hockey Association club apparently established its rough-house pattern of play in pre-season contests and they've since come under the jaundiced eyes of league officials.

The Sharks drew 10 of the 12 minor penalties meted out by referee Ron Sloane and the hometown Jets, playing before 5,105 fans, converted five into power-play scores, two of them by defenceman Larry Hornung.

In other WHA contests Tuesday, Minnesota Fighting Saints scored three goals in a span of 96 seconds to defeat the Eastern Division-leading Cleveland Crusaders 5-3 while Andre Lacroix's goal with 10 seconds left in the game gave Philadelphia Blazers a 4-3 win over Chicago Cougars.

Chris Bordeleau, Bobby Hull and Brian Cadle also scored for Winnipeg with the Sharks shorthanded. Bordeleau, with his 13th of the year, Dunc Rousseau and Danny Johnson tallied with the teams even.

The game at St. Paul was delayed for 15 minutes in the second period when Cleveland's Jim Wiste and Jay Anderson, a WHA employee, had a fight in the visitor's penalty box.

Wiste's team-mates joined in and were pelted chairs thrown from the stands by some of the 3,448 fans. Anderson, a former National Football League player with New York Giants, was taken to hospital with undetermined injuries.

Hay Stepping Down

TORONTO (CP) — Charles Hay, 70, ailing for the last few months, announced Tuesday he had decided to "lessen my own responsibilities within the organization," by resigning as president of Hockey Canada.

He retains his post as a member of the executive committee, which will operate Hockey Canada under its chairman, Douglas Fisher of Ottawa.

Hay had been president since the inception of Hockey Canada, formed in 1969 to guide the destiny of hockey in Canada. He was one of the chief figures who set up the recent Canada-Russia series.

Claremont Gains Share of Spotlight

It's difficult to steal the spotlight from Richard Kirkham in a cross country race these days, but the Claremont team at least gained a share of it Tuesday.

Kirkham, Oak Bay's defending British Columbia High School cross country champion, won his seventh consecutive race in the Victoria High School League. Claremont, however, placed runners second, third and fourth in the boys' division and first and second in the girls' event to win both team contests.

Kirkham covered the four-mile distance in 21 minutes, 12 seconds, followed by Claremont's George Brandstetter in 21:59 with Kevin Hunter third and Mike Hobson fourth.

Jill McLeod of Claremont took the girls' race over 2.2 miles in 14:27 with team-mate Michelle Brownsey second and Nancy Griffin of Mt. Douglas third.

St. Mike's Posts Win

Three trys by winger Ian Campbell paced St. Michael's University School to a 24-7 victory over Claremont in an inter-high exhibition rugby match Tuesday.

In other exhibitions, St. Michael's downed Arbutus 52-4 in junior high school action while Glenlyon beat Elizabeth Fisher 4-0 in an under-16 match and defeated Mount Newton 10-0 in under-14 play.

ST. MICHAEL'S (52)—David Dalziel three trys, Ed McCaffery two trys, Richard Noakes two trys, Reg Moore two trys and two converts, David Buckland one try, Michael Lau one try, Dennis Braunson one try; ARBUTUS (4)—Ken Heighs one try.

Nixons and Flyers Fighting for Lead

Nixons moved past Flyers Tuesday night at Juan de Fuca Arena by beating them 8-3. One point separates the teams.

Juan de Fuca Gulls, meanwhile, held off Esquimalt A and W for a 7-6 victory Tuesday night at Juan de Fuca to stay within a point of second place.

Larry Hansen and Garth Cunningham each scored twice for Nixons, who got single goals from Lorry Gloeckner, Jamie Robertson, Norm Allen and Larry Donaldson. Fuller's Lake marksmen were Paul Livingstone, Peter Rogerson and Brian Smith.

Ed Nichols and Barry McLachlin counted two each for Gulls with Dave Archibald, Ian McLean and Barry Hilton getting the others. Two-goal scorers for Esquimalt were John Entzminger and Paul Carson. Bruce McLean and Rick Fisher added one each.

Doing What Comes Naturally

By The Associated Press

Rick Barry, Jerry West and Walt Frazier are three of the superstars in the National Basketball Association paid super salaries to break open games.

And that's exactly what they did Tuesday night.

West poured in 15 of his 26 points in the last period as Los Angeles Lakers trimmed Milwaukee Bucks 95-92.

And Frazier scored 32 points as New York Knicks clouted Phoenix Suns 103-97.

Golden State was trailing 88-84 going into the final period before Barry took charge. The brilliant forward hit a 20-foot shot with four minutes left to give the Warriors a neverheaded 101-100 lead. Barry, who scored 19 points in the game, later added two field goals as the Warriors took a comfortable 106-100 advantage near the end.

West was the key man for Los Angeles down the stretch, helping his team pull away from an 86-86 tie in the closing minutes. His hot shooting overshadowed a fine performance by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Milwaukee, who scored 37 points and pulled in 16 rebounds.

Frazier controlled the flow of his game, as he usually does from his backcourt position. The all-star guard took game high-scoring honors just ahead of team-mate Bill Bradley, who also had a hot hand with 30 points.

In the other NBA games Tuesday night, Baltimore Bullets edged Houston Rockets 104-103; Chicago Bulls ripped Seattle SuperSonics 97-80; Kansas City-Omaha Kings nipped Buffalo Braves 106-101 and Portland Trail Blazers spanked Cleveland Cavaliers 100-91.

In the American Basketball Association, it was: Carolina 127 Virginia 118; Denver 118 Indiana 108 and San Diego 122 Utah 111.

Soviet Series Is On Again

MONTREAL (CP) — The National Hockey League is planning a 10-game series with the Russians to be played in the middle of the 1973-74 season, NHL president Clarence Campbell said Tuesday.

The series would see a Russian hockey team play against regular NHL teams with six games in North America, two in Moscow and two in Leningrad, Campbell said in an interview.

Details of the series, such as how many games each NHL team involved would play, have not been worked out.

Campbell said current plans call for the NHL to decide which teams would play the Russians and build the regular-season schedule around the special series.

Campbell said there are plans for a two'day rest between each game in the series rather than the one-day rest used in the series against the Russian national team last September.

Team Canada, made up of players from NHL teams, squeaked out a 4-3-1 edge in games over the Russians in the eight-game September series.

Transplanted Goose Shot In Nimpkish Valley Area

A note from Ian Smith, regional wildlife biologist for Vancouver Island, on the Nimpkish goose transplant program:

"Needless to say, we are pleased with the apparent success of the project to date, and are hopeful that the birds surviving from the 1971 introduction will nest in the Nimpkish Valley this spring, thus establishing the success of the project. We will be assisting the birds by erecting nest-tubs in appropriate locations, although there is no guarantee of course, that the geese will nest in the tubs in preference to natural nesting sites.

"However, it was distressing to have one of the birds shot by a 'hunter' (some hunter!) in mid-October, despite the presence of signs and a hand-out at the Canfor gate describing the project and warning that the area is closed to goose shooting."

It is irresponsible actions such as this that are creating a stereotyped image of "hunters" in the public mind . . . Again, at the risk of belaboring a point, we must police ourselves if hunting is to survive as a sport.

Pacific Salmon Society directors recently passed a resolution against all seining of herring stocks during the time of spawning . . . Any utilization of this resource, they reasoned, should be carried out during the peak condition of the flesh as food . . . Thus locally-caught herring would also gain greater acceptance on the domestic market . . . Exporting 3,000 tons of herring roe to oriental markets doesn't seem too logical while wasting 39,000 tons of carcasses, unusable for food because of the poor condition of the flesh, through reduction. . . . If herring fishing must go on, let's make the best-use possible of all the catch. . . . Providing, of course, there is no harmful effect on the salmon stocks.

B.C. Railway, a crown corporation, has come under fire from Morley Pinsent, a regional fisheries biologist for the fish and wildlife branch . . . The criticism came following a slide caused by construction of the extension to Dease Lake, which dumped tons of earth into the Bear River (240 miles northeast of Prince George) . . . He said:

"The silt can easily suffocate the fish eggs. The steelhead spawn in the spring, and maybe the river will have flushed itself out somewhat by then, but the salmon are just in the process of spawning or have just finished spawning, and there is nothing we can do to help them."

According to Pinsent, the B.C. Railway "knew it was a very unstable silt clay bank, and there were supposed to be attempts at maintaining the area, but apparently something went wrong. The B.C. Railway hasn't been one of our better corporate citizens. Generally, it has been something less than easy to deal with when it comes to environmental matters."

Channelization and flood control . . . These are turning out to be fighting words to wildlife managers in the United States, who realize that rivers and streams are literally the life blood of both fish and animals . . . John Madson of Winchester-Western, a company that has a vested interest in the well-being of wildlands, writes:

"It is sometimes necessary, especially where urban streams flow through residential and industrial areas. However, channelization should be the final alternative. Before any actual engineering in a natural streambed, there should be careful weighing of losses and gains — with biologists, as well as engineers and economists, calling the tune. Floodplain zoning should be considered; it may be cheaper and better to let the stream live free in its floodplain instead of making that floodplain safe for soybeans and used-car lots.

"And even when channelization is the only answer, there are ways to case its damage to a river system.

"Natural streams do more than support wildlife; they are wildlife. They are alive and active, changing the land and giving it the features that make country worth living in — for us as well as the wild creatures that we prize."

Thus, while considering flood control on the Fraser River, we should look to the south for some lessons to learn and mistakes not worth repeating.

HOCKEY TIPS

By Bobby Orr

Hockey is like any game — the better you play it, the more you enjoy it. And the most important aspect of the game is skating.

The average youngster needs hours and hours of skating time in order to build up the ankles and get accustomed to moving quickly on ice.

That's why coaches, even in the National Hockey League, devote several hours early in training camp, to skating drills. At the Boston camp, the coach will line us up at one end and on a whistle, we speed to the nearest blueline, stop, then start again to the next blueline, stop, and then go to the boards.

This drill is great for building up the legs and is something everyone can do in the days between hockey games. Practice fast starts and stops. Practice skating backwards and if the ice isn't crowded, have a friend time you going the length of the ice. Then try and beat that time.

Then see how fast you can make it with stops at both bluelines. Keep at it until you feel you can't make it to the other end. Then do it once again. The best conditioning results when you make that little extra effort.

And in the warmup period before the game, use every minute. Skate as fast as you can, don't stand around like some of the pros.

During the game, a player who can breakaway fast, who can stop quickly, who can move backwards, will be a valuable asset to any coach. Every opening in a hockey game must be exploited. And the strong skater is in a position to do that. The only way to be a strong skater is to work at it.

LANDSLIDE VOTE that left him with 21 of possible 24 first-place votes has produced award as most-valuable player in baseball's American League for muscular Dick Allen (above), slugging first baseman with Chicago White Sox. Allen, who slammed league-high 37 home runs and batted in career high 113 runs, finished with 321 points, far ahead of Oakland's Joe Rudi, who received 164. Third was New York relief pitcher Sparky Lyle with 158 votes.

Invaders Retain Seattle Cup

SEATTLE — Oak Bay Invaders captured the Seattle Cup for the second straight year Monday be beating Wedgewood Bears 36-8 in a bantam football game played under American rules.

Invaders downed Ballard Bombers for the challenge trophy the first time it was played last year.

Rob Cowan led Invaders with two touchdowns and a two-point running conversion. Single majors were scored by Fred Carlson, who also contributed a running conversion, Rick Cordick and Dennis Moore. Rob Parris added another two points on a passing conversion.

Riel Escudero scored the Wedgewood TD while Jeff Elder supplied the running conversion.

Mare Brings Top Price

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Fontainbleu Farm paid $160,000 Tuesday night for a four-year-old mare, Polygon, daughter of Never Bend out of Poly Girl, for the highest price of the first two days of the Keeneland Breeding Stock Sale.

Earlier, Frank M. O'Ferrall of London, England, paid $150,000 for Captain's Mate, a three-year-old daughter of Turn-to in foal to Graustark.

United Leaves It Up to the Coach

Playing coach Ron Thompson came off the bench to lead Victoria West-United into sole possession of first place in the Pacific Coast Soccer League Tuesday night at Royal Athletic park.

Thompson, reluctant to get into action unless the team is in difficulty, made the move at half time and sparked West United to a 3-2 victory over Victoria Gorge Molsons.

The teams were tied for top spot going into the game.

Outhustling their more experienced rivals throughout the first half, Gorge managed to come out of it with a 1-1 tie. Then Thompson and Pakos got together.

Thompson put West-United into a 2-1 lead at eight minutes of the second half, converting a pass from George Pakos.

Nine minutes later, Pakos teamed with Thompson again for a picture goal that proved to be the winner. Thompson lofted a high shot toward Gorge goaltender Graham Lee, who went up for the save.

Stu Taylor drilled a shot past Lee at the 32-minute mark of the first half to put United ahead, 1-0, but Gorge tied the score less than a minute later when George Hyne trickled a shot past netminder Ash Douglas.

Burnaby North Is Rated Top Threat in Tourney

There will be a dozen dandy high school soccer sides stepping into action on Victoria pitches Thursday and for 11 of them the motto might be "beat Burnaby North."

Target for the prep booters is the provincial championship and it is no surprise that Burnaby North rates as the most-feared team in the third renewal of the tourney, which grew out of the former "B.C. championship" game between the Vancouver Island titleholder and the Lower Mainland winner.

Winner of the Province Trophy in 1970 and runner-up to Victoria High Tyees last year, Burnaby North has displayed enough power this season to be touted as the best high school side in the province.

Tyees didn't make it to the Victoria final this year and the city will be represented by Oak Bay Bays, the league and playoff kings, and Belmont Braves.

Powell River is listed as a Vancouver Island entry and Burnaby North will be joined by Steveston and Vancouver Technical in the Vancouver-area contingent.

North Delta and Abbotsford won Fraser Valley berths in the tourney, which will also include clubs from Kitimat, Vernon, Kimberley and Castlegar.

All teams will be in action Thursday, with four of them making two appearances, in seven matches scheduled at the University of Victoria field and Centennial Stadium and an 8 p.m. clash between Oak Bay and Vancouver Tech at Royal Athletic Park.

Four more games are slated early Friday to decide the four section winners, who will battle in semi-final contests at 6:45 and 8 p.m. in Athletic Park.

Two consolation contests are slated for Saturday morning before final action begins to unfold on Centennial Stadium turf, where a battle for third and fourth places is slated for 2:30 p.m.

Walkout Costs Trevino $850

NEW YORK (AP) — Golfer Lee Trevino was slapped with an $850 fine Tuesday for walking out of the Sahara invitation tournament last month and criticizing officials.

Joseph C. Dey, Jr., commissioner of the Professional Golfers Association Tournament Players Division, announcing the fine, said punishment of the popular former United States open champion and reigning British Open king was softened because of Trevino's attitude.

"The extent of the penalty for this major violation of tournament regulations was influenced not only by the fact that Mr. Trevino was the defending champion but, in mitigation, by his prompt and unqualified apology to tournament officials," Dey said in his formal release.

Trevino picked up his ball and walked off the course after playing nine holes of the third round in the Sahara tournament at Las Vegas, Oct. 28.

He had first complained that he was weary from too much tournament play but later took a blast at the slow play of the tournament.

Afterward, Trevino apologized and publicly announced that he felt he was wrong and was deserving of some sort of punishment.

COLORADO CITIZENS CONTINUE BATTLE

DENVER (UPI) — The Denver Olympic Organizing Committee, Tuesday, formally withdrew its invitation to host the 1976 Winter Olympics. A citizens group, however, continued to look for alternate funding to keep them.

The DOOC passed a resolution withdrawing its invitation to the International Olympic Committee to host the games last week after Colorado voters solidly passed a proposal cutting off public funding.

The citizens group obtained a temporary restraining order to keep the DOOC from forwarding its withdrawal until this week.

"We do not want to do anything to prejudice the efforts of the citizens committee trying to retain the games, however, we also have an obligation to inform the USOC and the IOC of recent developments and the actions we have taken," said Carl N. de Temple, DOOC president and general secretary said.

De Temple also said the DOOC was liquidating its assets and preparing to wind up its business.

"In so doing, de Temple said, "we are preparing a report that will reflect our activities up to this time.

"Any such report, of course, will be a matter of public record and available for future reference by the International Olympic Committee or others who may be interested."

At Lausanne, Switzerland, Lord Michael Killanin, IOC president, and his three vice presidents met to discuss the future of the Winter Games and review informal offers by Lake Placid, N.Y., and Innsbruck, Austria to host them.

"There is no statement today and we are not sure if the meeting will go on Wednesday," an IOC spokesman said.

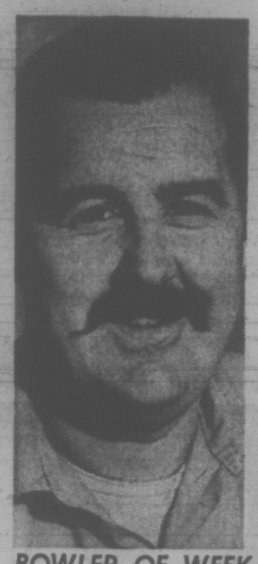
The spokesman declined to comment on whether the IOC chiefs discussed the possibility of abolishing the Winter Games altogether.

Attorney Harry Arkin of Denver, head of the Colorado Citizens to Retain the Winter Games, asked Killanin to allow the 1976 Olympics to remain at Denver.

He said the games could be funded through private donations.

Killanin said the IOC would delay an announcement on a final decision until it received Denver's formal withdrawal.

President Clifford Buck of the USOC said at Denver he did not think the games would remain in Colorado. He added he doubted the IOC would name another American city to host them.



BOWLER OF WEEK

Consistency was key to success for Brian Cooper as he earned men's tenpin award in fifth week of annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest. Brian topped male keglers by rolling 214-225-225—664 series in Dockyard League at Mayfair Lanes.

Avery Insists Benefits Big

MONTREAL (CP) — Avery Brundage, past-president of the International Olympic Committee, says that Montreal "will never regret" playing host for the 1976 Summer Games.

He said the city will be "repaid 10 times" for anything it must pay to hold the Games.

Brundage, 85-year-old honorary life president of the IOC, said he was impressed with the progress being made here in preparation for the Games.

He said the Olympics, when awarded to Melbourne, Australia, for 1956, had brought "a great outcry" of protest from people opposed to the cost of the Games.

"But for Australia it developed immigration through four years of world publicity and in effect brought the whole South Seas back into the world."

He cited similar opposition when Japan spent $3 billion on the 1964 Tokyo Games, but said the Japanese had virtually ripped the old city to shreds and the re-development had made Tokyo "a much better city for having the Games."

Brundage said he knew Montreal was being attacked by certain factions about the costs of the Games, but that in 1968 Mexico was supposed to be unable to stage the Olympics for the same reason — national apprehension over costs.

Opposition to the Games has arisen here since Colorado citizens voted against use of state funds to hold the 1976 Winter Gamer in Denver.

Maddox Bucks History

By DICK PETTYS

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — As Lester Maddox tells it, the school-age child had just finished having a picture taken with Gov. Jimmy Carter when she began complaining to her teacher.

"You said we were going to have our picture taken with the governor," the child said.

"You did," the teacher replied.

Maddox, chuckling, tells the story with obvious delight because it illustrates the widely held belief that Maddox is still, despite his two-year absence from the governor's office, the state's most popular politician.

Once a symbol of southern defiance of forced desegregation, Maddox confounded his critics by governing the state from 1967 to 1970, a period marked by relatively peaceful race relations and stable government.

When he had to give up the governor's office because state law prohibits a governor from succeeding himself he was elected lieutenant-governor, ousting the incumbent.

Maddox, 57, has two more years before his term as lieutenant-governor expires. By that time—1974—he will be eligible to run for governor again.

Most people expect him to make the race.

History is against Maddox, and he knows it. He has remarked to others that no recent Georgia governor since Eugene Talmadge in the 1940s has been able to make a comeback.

Another factor observers see looming as a potential liability for Maddox is his increased involvement in private business. Too much success, they say, could tarnish his image as campaign of the "little people."

Maddox's duties in the $20,000-a-year lieutenant-governor's office mainly involve presiding over the state Senate for three months every year, beginning in January.

He and his wife, Virginia, operate a souvenir shop in Underground Atlanta, a top Atlanta tourist attraction which features bars, restaurants and shops in an 1890s setting.

They sell Lester Maddox souvenirs—a Lester Maddox wrist watch, clock, tee-shirt, records and other assorted items.

ROADSIDE JUSTICE GETS THE AXE

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that a man can't be tried by a judge who doubles as the village mayor and raises revenue for the village with the fines he collects.

In a 7-to-2 decision, the court held that such part-time jurists have a built-in "incentive to convict" which deprives the defendant of a fair trial.

The decision struck down the "mayor's court" system of trying traffic and petty offences in Ohio and called into question similar systems in 16 other states.

These systems of "roadside justice" fell under the broad attack of a trucker's service organization which carried a case from Monroeville, Ohio, to the supreme court to set aside two $50 traffic fines.

Auto Pact Talks Await Final Poll Tally

OTTAWA (CP) — Talks between the United States and Canada on the future of the auto pact have been postponed indefinitely because of the political situation in Canada, informed sources said Tuesday.

However, officials of the two countries will get together in Washington at the end of this month to talk about world trade, it was disclosed.

A trade department spokesman said the agenda of the coming meeting has not been finally settled. Nor has the makeup of the Canadian delegation, though it may be headed by a deputy minister.

A U.S. embassy source said the talks probably will centre on multilateral negotiations scheduled to take place in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) next year.

They will permit representatives of the two countries to compare notes with a view possibly to reaching common positions on issues to come before the GATT meeting.

The trade department spokesman said there are no immediate plans for the resumption of talks on Canada-U.S. trade differences. The talks, which have been adjourned in deadlock since February, were to have resumed about this time.

However, the inconclusive result of the Oct. 30 federal election which left the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives tied with 108 seats each, has raised doubts about the strength of the Canadian negotiating position and forced a postponement.

Prime Minister Trudeau said Nov. 2 that his Liberal government will not enter into any binding agreements until it has received a vote of confidence in the House of Commons.

The new Parliament may not be called into session until January, though the government is under pressure both from within the Liberal party and from opposition parties to make arrangements for a December sitting.

Principal issue in the stalled trade talks is the agreement providing for free commerce in automobiles and auto parts between Canada and the U.S.

The Americans are anxious to have the pact overhauled to remove or modify safeguards that protect the Canadian auto industry and have contributed to a Canadian surplus on trade between the two countries. Canada has been resisting the U.S. on this point.

The trade department withheld comment Tuesday on a statement by an adviser to President Nixon that the U.S. will press for substantial changes in the auto agreement.

Peter Flanigan, special presidential assistant for international economic policy, said in Detroit Monday that his country wants changes "that should work to the benefit of the United States."

Apollo Count Starts

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — The Apollo 17 astronauts begin three weeks of pre-flight medical isolation today while launch crews start the final major rocket and spaceship tests for a Dec. 6 blastoff to the moon.

The isolation, in which the astronauts' movements and contacts are restricted, is to minimize exposure to disease or illness that could delay the last mission in the Apollo series.

Strikers Hold Keys

MONTREAL (CP) — Police said ignition keys for a dozen delivery trucks were stolen Tuesday as striking truck drivers attempted to keep non-striking employees of other companies from working.

Meanwhile suburban St. Leonard police said Tuesday one of two men arrested earlier for damaging a truck with an iron bar has been summonsed to appear in municipal court Dec. 4 to face a charge of public mischief.

No charges were laid against the second man.

Twelve trucks were damaged Monday and a driver for one company operating despite the strike was treated in hospital for shock after his truck was attacked.

The strike, by about 2,000 members of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, affects only 34 of about 800 trucking companies in the Montreal area.

It began Saturday when contract negotiations between the companies and Local 391 of the Teamsters union broke down.

The issues under dispute include working hours, conditions, and fringe benefits.

CENSUS PLANS APPEAL

OTTAWA (CP) — Statistics Canada intends to ask for an appeal of a Winnipeg court decision in favor of a professor who refused to answer questions for the 1971 census.

Vernon Dutton, a 57-year-old professor of civil engineering at the University of Manitoba, received an absolute discharge in magistrate's court after pleading guilty to a charge of refusing to provide information under the Statistics Act.

A Statistics Canada official said Tuesday that the final decision on whether the government will appeal is up to the justice department but "we have every intention of asking for an appeal because a very important question is at stake."

Dutton had told the Winnipeg court that the census amounts to an invasion of privacy.

Former Lion Sentenced

VANCOUVER (CP) — Rudy Reschke, 30, a former linebacker with British Columbia Lions of the Canadian Football League, was given a conditional discharge Tuesday after he pleaded guilty to indecently assaulting two waitresses and assaulting two other women.

Provincial Court judge Les Bewley ruled that if Reschke behaves himself for a year he will be given an unconditional discharge.

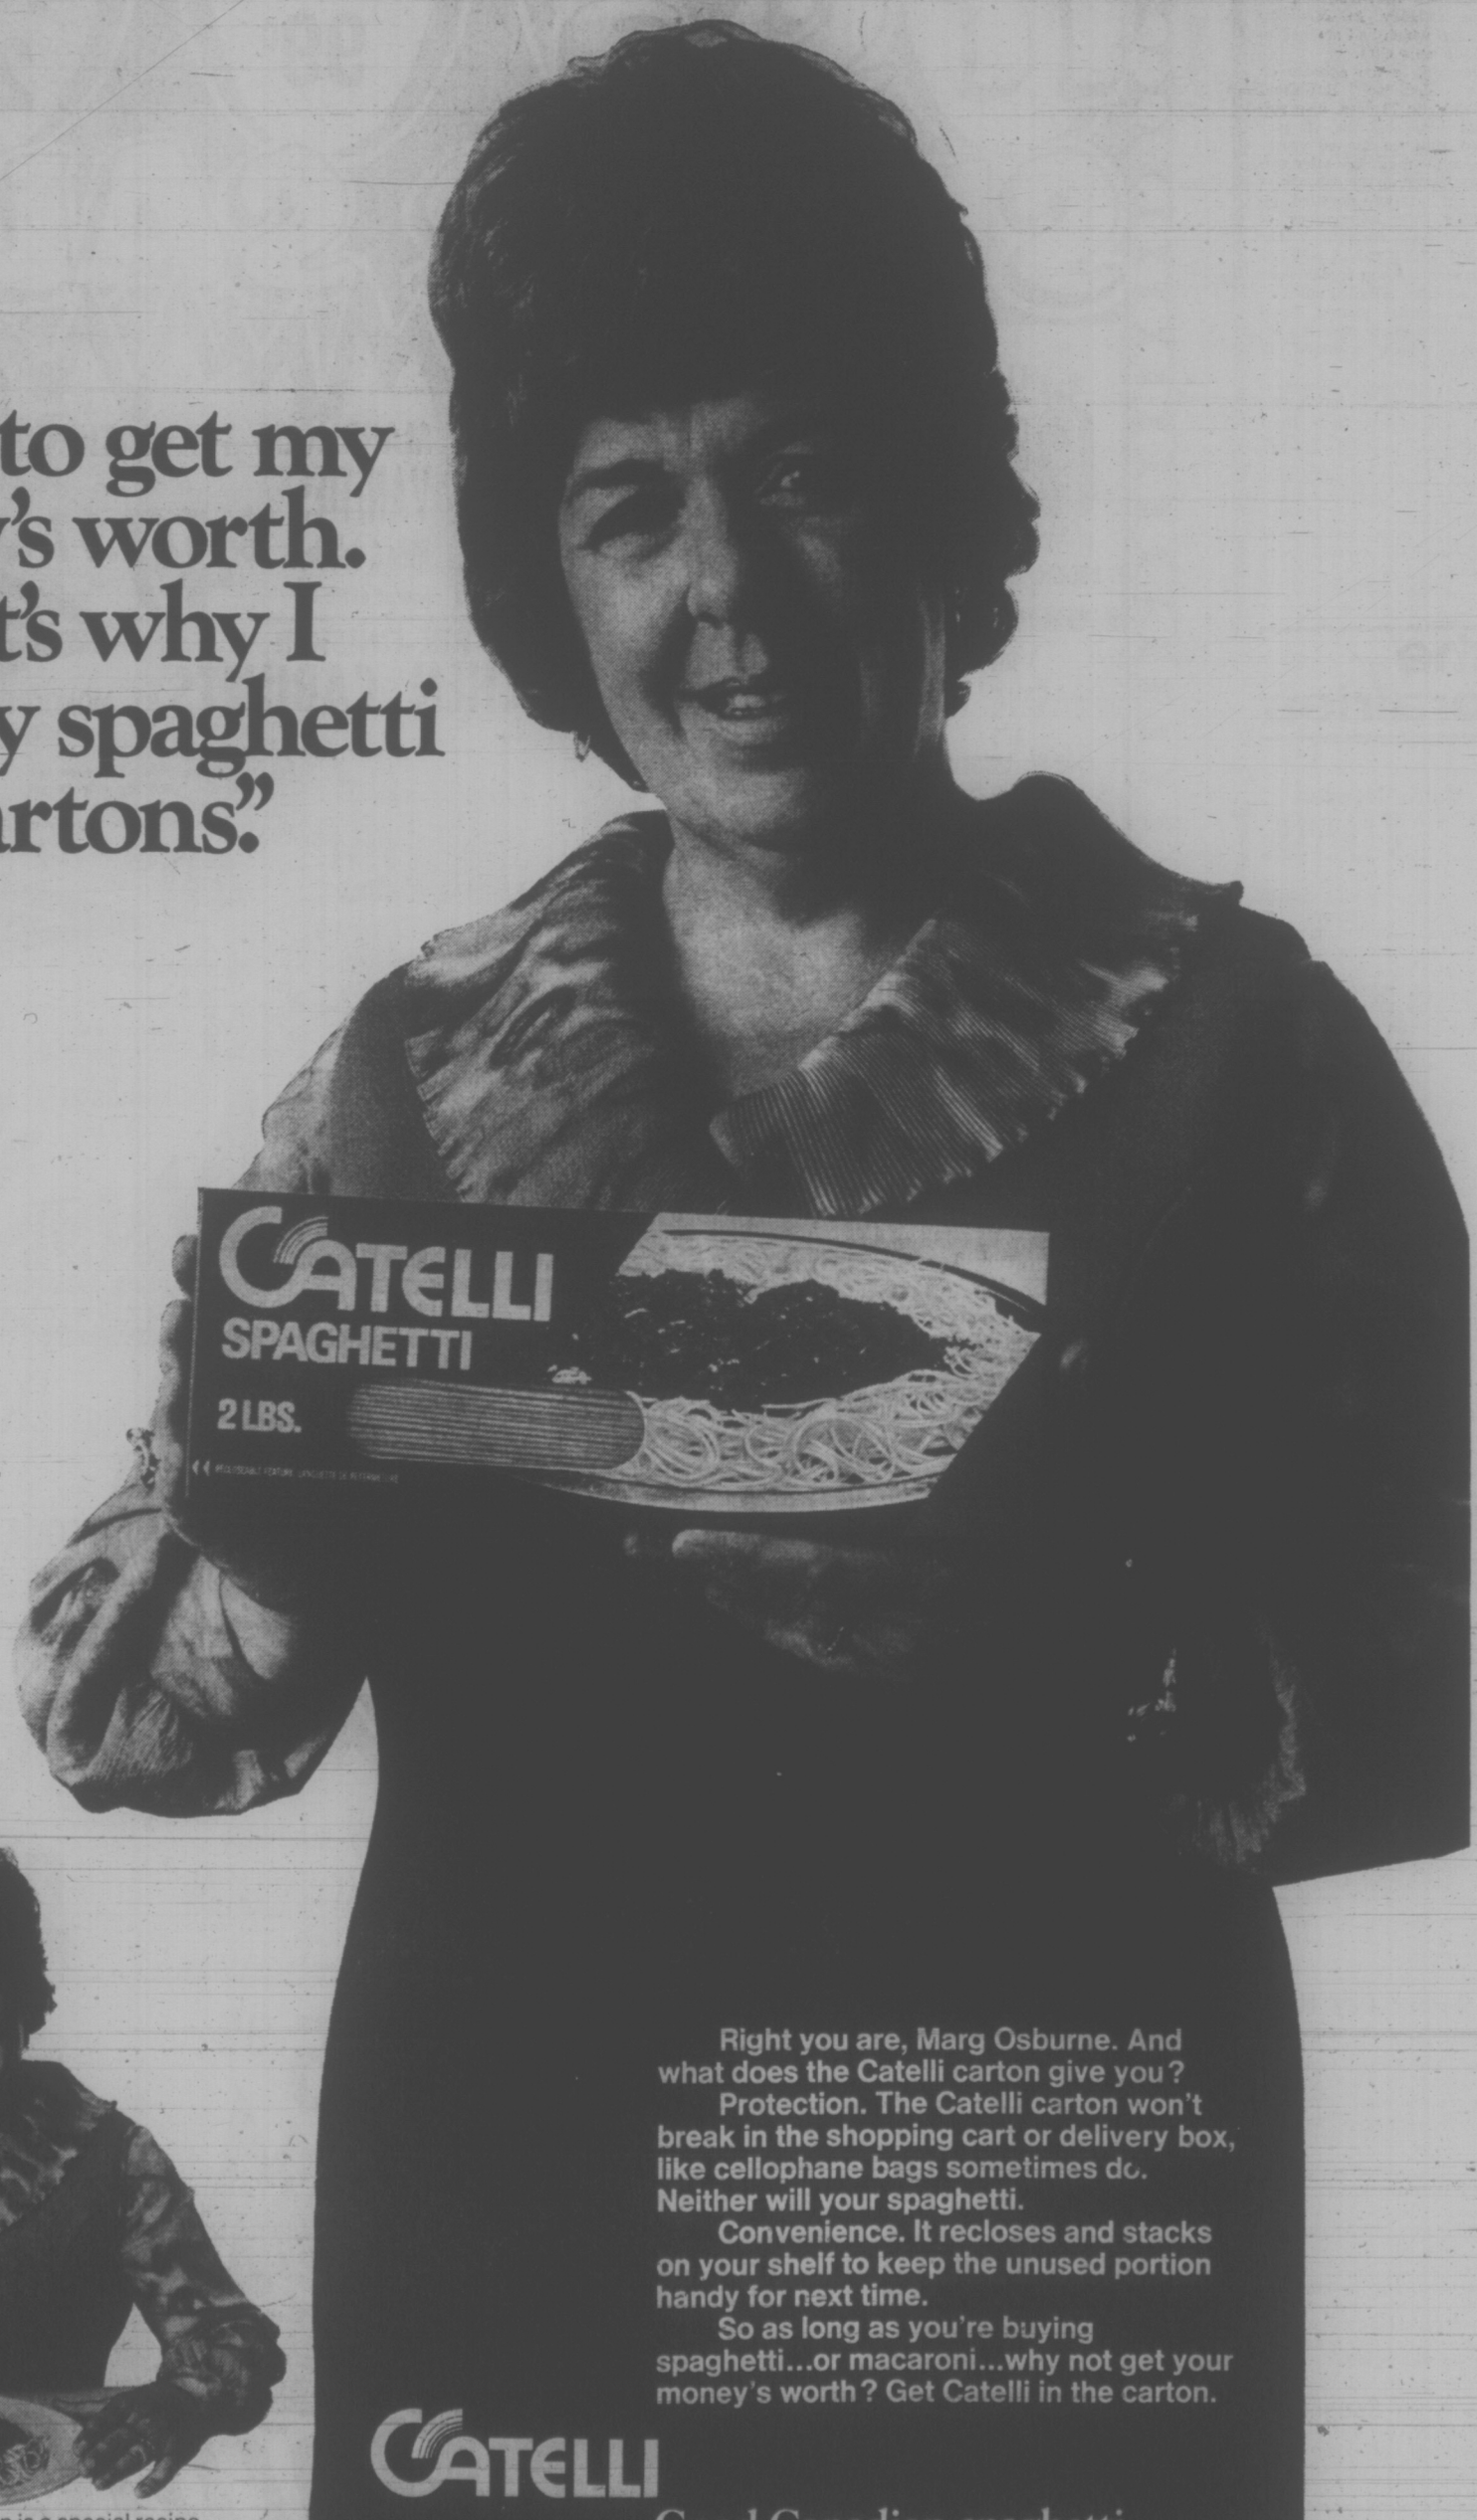
He was charged after an incident Aug. 12 in a downtown club in which the waitresses were grabbed and two women customers who came to their aid were roughed up.

Judge Bewley said the affair "involved a foolish act brought on by too much liquor. The accused has suffered enough in embarrassment and loss of money."

Runs in Family

RUSH CITY, Minn. (AP) — Longevity runs in her family but Mary Tesch, who will have her 100th birthday Friday, topped them all. Mrs. Tesch lives in a nursing home here. Her husband, Herman, died in 1941. The couple had five children, 15 grandchildren and 33 great grandchildren. Mrs. Tesch's father died at 95 and she had two sisters and two brothers who lived to between 92 and 96.

"I like to get my money's worth. That's why I buy my spaghetti in cartons."



On every Catelli carton is a special recipe for spaghetti with whole tomato sauce. Marg Osburne one of Canada's top television entertainers, is enjoying it here. Why not serve it to your family tonight?

Right you are, Marg Osburne. And what does the Catelli carton give you?

Convenience. It recloses and stacks on your shelf to keep the unused portion handy for next time.

So as long as you're buying spaghetti...or macaroni...why not get your money's worth? Get Catelli in the carton.

Train Man Pinned

CALGARY (CP) — Conductor Edwin Deering, 58, of Medicine Hat, trapped 3½ hours in train wreckage Tuesda, suffered a severe leg injury following a train collision east of here.

The accident occurred near Indus, Alta., when a 32-car eastbound Canadian Pacific Railway freight train heading for Toronto hit the back of another CP Rail freight going from Calgary to Medicine Hat and which had stopped to pick up more cars.

Deering, in the caboose on the Medicine Hat-bound freight with 73 cars, also suffered minor injuries. He was freed from the tangled wreckage on the main line after rescuers jacked up the caboose.

Eight cars wre derailed, including four locomotives of the Toronto freight. A car loaded with plywood and one with new half-ton trucks were among other derailed units.

The engines poured diesel fuel into a ditch after the accident, which occurred in heavy fog.

A CP Rail spokesman said nine men were on the trains and two others, both from Medicine Hat, also received minor injuries.

East and westbound passengers were to be taken by bus from Calgary and Brooks, about 100 miles southeast of here, until the wreckage was cleared.

Voice Needed

REGINA (CP) — Grain producers, through their wheat pools, must have a major voice in decisions about any future grain handling system for Western Canada, Ira Mumford, general manager of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, said Tuesday.

Mumford, speaking at the pool's annual meeting, said eventual grain handling developments, whatever they might be, will involve major decisions by grain companies and railways.

Beer Banned

REGINA (CP) — The Saskatchewan liquor board has ordered Calgary Export Lager off the provincial market for two months for "advertising and promotion of the product contrary to the provisions of the liquor act."

Carling Brewery, makers of the beer, was involved in a celebration after the Saskatchewan Roughrider-British Columbia Lions Western Football Conference game Thanksgiving weekend.

During the game, an airplane circled the field pulling a banner urging fans to "have a barley sandwich." At halftime, a sky diver jumped for a target rolled out in the middle of the field bearing the horseshoe emblem common to Calgary beer.

India Eyes Rapeseed

WINNIPEG (CP)—India has indicated it will submit a tender for purchase of a "fairly substantial quantity" of Canadian rapeseed or rapeseed oil, the executive director of the Canadian Rapeseed Association said Tuesday.

James McAnch of Vancouver said the tender "will be fairly sizeable but it won't take our surplus away." the amount would not be known for certain until a tender is actually received in Canada, McAnch said.

9-Hour Day Hit

CALGARY (CP) — Bill Patterson, secretary of the Calgary Labor Council says he is "appalled" by some city employers who force their staff to work a nine-hour day without any lunch or coffee breaks.

"A lot of Calgarians without union protection are being forced to work without lunch breaks or breaks of any kind . . . this has been on for a long time."

The practice is legal, he said, because the Alberta Labor Act makes no provision in the act for any break during the working day.

Cure Sought

EDMONTON (CP) — The provincial government is studying the possibility of cracking down on manufacturers of prefabricated housing who accept deposits from customers and then declare bankruptcy, Attorney-General Merv Leitch said Tuesday.

"We are looking into possible ways and means of curing the problem," he said in a legislature reply to Grant Notley (NDP—Spirit River-Fairview).

Alberta to Use 'Decency', Not Law, to Defeat KKK

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta Bill of Rights does not need to ban such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan because the "good sense and decency" of ordinary people will eventually drive the klan out of the province, Attorney-General Merv Leitch told the legislature Tuesday night.

He was speaking during committee study of the proposed Bill of Rights, introduced by Premier Peter Lougheed as supplementary legislation to the Canadian Bill of Rights.

"I'm confident there isn't a member in this house who doesn't find the philosophy, presence and activities of the Klan within Alberta thoroughly reprehensible. Undoubtedly, the vast majority of people in Alberta feel the same way.

"The question is: Do we tolerate them or do we endeavor to legislate them out of existence?"

Mr. Leitch said legislation which would outlaw or control groups like the Klan—which believes in racial purity—would strengthen rather than weaken them. It provides "the excitement of doing the prohibited; it tends to drive them underground where their activities are not exposed to the light of day."

CITES EXAMPLE

The attorney-general said a good example of this was the banning of the Communist party in the U.S.

"I think everyone will agree that that party in the United States has caused more difficulty, has greater strength and more vitality than it has in Canada. I suggest that a great deal of that difference can be traced to the fact that in one country they were outlawed and in another country they weren't.

"I believe the most reliable test of the freedom of the people and the quality of the society in which they live is their willingness to tolerate the unpleasant, the repugnant and the reprehensible in thought, speech and the philosophy.

"I would say that the measure of a people's freedom is the extent to which they will tolerate the intolerable."

Mr. Leitch said the best control of such activity is better left to "the good sense, the decency and the judgment" of ordinary Albertans. This would "put the Klan out of existence" more quickly and more effectively than legislation.

The Ku Klux Klan of Alberta was incorporated under the Provincial Societies Act last spring. Its headquarters are in Calgary but it's now known how many member it has in the province although the total is believed small.

The bill moved through committee with a couple of minor amendments and now only needs the formality of third reading and royal assent.

It is aimed, in its own words, "at protecting the citizen from the power of the state" and would prohibit the legislature from enacting laws which would "abrogate, abridge or infringe" on the individual's freedoms of speech, religion, assembly and association as well as equality before the law and freedom of the press.

VANCOUVER TEACHERS SIGN

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver School Board and its 2,682 teachers ratified a 1972-73 contract Tuesday which gives the teachers a salary increase of 9.17 per cent.

The increase brings the salary of a beginning teacher with two years of university to $7,093 and that of a teacher with a masters degree and 12 years experience to $17,172.

The deadline for contract agreements in British Columbia's 74 school districts was midnight Tuesday. Only 30 districts were reported to have settled and the rest will have to go to binding arbitration.

A spokesman for the B.C. Teachers' Federation said the contracts offered to the province's 20,000 teachers provided for an average 9.3 per cent salary increase.

Charged in Deaths

VANCOUVER (CP) — William Salisbury, 25, of Vancouver has been charged with two counts of criminal negligence and one count of driving while impaired in connection with an accident that killed two men. Anthony John Fleig, 22, of Point Claire, Que., and Kim Wagner, 18, of Sarnia, Ont., died in the accident Monday night.

Educators to Meet

PORT MOODY (CP) — About 500 educators are expected to attend an international science education symposium Friday and Saturday here. Featured guest at the symposium will be Robert Tannenbaum of New York, a leading North American expert in computer sciences.

Woman in Race

VANCOUVER (CP) — Angie Dennis, a 29-year-old Indian woman, announced Tuesday she will seek the mayor's position in the December civic elections. She is the fourth candidate to enter the mayoralty race. Mrs. Dennis will run as the candidate of the Committee of Progressive Electors.

Judge Dies

BURNABY (CP) — Funeral services will be held Thursday for Burnaby provincial court judge Harvey Jessop, who died Sunday. He was 51. Jessop served as district judge for five years here and was a judge for 13 years in Kitimat.

Fall at SFU

BURNABY (CP) — Victor Schulman, 23, of Nakusp, was in satisfactory condition in hospital Tuesday after falling from a sixth-floor balcony at a residence at Simon Fraser University. Apartment manager Rick Pappin said Schulman had forgotten his apartment key and was trying to climb in from a balcony when he fell.

Travel Resumes

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Commercial air traffic resumed Tuesday at the Kamloops airport after a combination of fog and an inversion layer closed the airport for three days. Commercial flights during the closure were re-routed to Kelowna.

Prison Complaints

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — J. R. Stone, western regional director of the federal penitentiary service, will investigate complaints about the working conditions of penitentiary guards, a spokesman for the guards' union said Tuesday. Bev Sherman, regional director of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, said a meeting with Stone Tuesday had satisfied union members "that something will be done about their complaints."

Bolts Prison

MATSQUI (CP) — Birdie Bard, 35, escaped from Matsqui institution Tuesday. Police said Bird, who was serving a term for a parole revocation, apparently made his escape while working in the kitchen.

Teachers Vote

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Teachers in Kamloops schsool district are to vote Friday on ratification of a contract agreement providing a pay increase of 8.74 per cent. Ken Smith, president of the Kamloops and District Teachers' Association, said several teachers have disagreed with the proposed settlement and will meet with the association agreements committee Thursday.

UN African Bloc Wins Censure of Portugal

As the largest and perhaps tightest voting bloc, Africans won an unexpected victory in the vote to put the United Nations environment agency in Nairobi, the capital of Kenya.

The second show of strength in a week by the 40 non-white African nations came Tuesday. They won a General Assembly vote to censure Portugal and recognize rebels as authentic representatives of Portugal's African territories —Portuguese Guinea, Mozambique and Angola.

Australia, Austria, Canada, Israel, Japan and the Scandinavian countries joined in the 98-to-6 vote on Tuesday to censure Portugal.

Only Britain, the United States, Spain and Brazil stuck with Portugal and South Africa. France abstained.

The Africans requested and got a meeting of the Security Council today to air more protests against Portugal, the last white colonial power on the continent.

The Organization of African Unity claims 1972 has been the most productive year for African statesmen. Their accomplishments include:

1. General Assembly vote to set aside a Week of Solidarity with the "colonial peoples of southern Africa." The week begins May 25, 1973, the 10th anniversary of the OAU.

2. A meeting of the Security Council in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the first session ever outside New York.

3. An appearance by Amilcar Cabral, rebel leader in Portuguese Guinea, as an official UN observer.

4. A Security Council resolution in October condemning Portugal for sending troops from Portuguese Guinea into neighboring Senegal in pursuit of Guinean rebels.

5. A mission by three UN representatives to the scene of Portuguese Guinea's 10-year war for independence.

6. A visit by Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to South-West Africa, a disputed territory controlled by South Africa. He was to release his findings late today.

Hog Board Set

The five-member commission will include Harry-Jay Elder of Fillmore, Victor Althouse of Lintlaw, Robert Edwards of Nokomis, Garfield Stevenson of Whitewood and Ray Nicholson of Saskatoon.

COOKIE-EATING BUCK BEFRIENDS HUNTERS

CULPEPER, Va. (AP) — A three-point buck trotted into a camp of bear hunters in the rugged Blue Ridge Mountains Sunday night, made friends, and got a supper of chocolate cookies.

Now the hunters are trying to make sure the deer doesn't get shot.

Pete Clatterbuck, one of the bear hunters, said: "We were shocked when this deer, tired and sweaty, trotted into camp and made friends with everybody. . . . As we petted him he kept looking back over his shoulder like ssomething was after him."

The hunters then recalled a story and photograph which had appeared in the Culpeper Star-Exponent several months back of a pet deer. The deer had belonged to a 15-year-old girl.

The deer had grown too big and game wardens had tranquillized the animal and carried him into the Shenandoah National Forest where he might be safe from hunters.

With deer hunting season opening next Monday, The Culpeper hunters are working against the clock to get the game wardens to go into the mountains and find the pet deer.

They want the game wardens to tranquillize the animal and take it even farther into the wilds, so there will be less chance the friendly animal will walk up to a deer hunter in a fatal effort to make friends.

ARGENTINE WOMAN PREGNANT AFTER OVARY TRANSPLANT

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — A young Argentine woman may be the first in history to give birth after an ovary transplant, her doctors say. The baby is due in March, and so far there are no complications.

A report on the case was to be made today to the Brazil-Israeli Congress of Fertility and Sterility by Dr. Raul Blanco, head of the Argentine surgical team that performed the transplant last March in Buenos Aires.

"The pregnancy already is more than three months in progress, and it is completely normal," Dr. Blanco said in an interview.

"We have not encountered any symptoms of rejection so far, and we have not administered any treatment to prevent this possibility."

The 38-year-old surgeon acknowledged that the genetic characteristics of the baby will be those of the woman who donated the ovary and not the mother. He said this could create psychological problems for both women.

But "all of the developments that make a woman a mother— the conception, the implanting of the egg in the uterus, the pregnancy and finally the birth—all of these processes of motherhood occur in the recipient and not the donor," he added.

In an effort to avoid psychological disturbances among the mother, father and donor, Blanco's 25-man team at Buenos Aires' Alvear Hospital included a psychiatrist. His chief task has been to assure the woman receiving the transplant that it will not affect her personality and to convince the donor that she can have children normally despite the removal of one of her two ovaries.

The doctor declined to give personal details of the pregnant woman, her husband or the donor, including their ages and occupations, "to avoid questions of possession between the two women."

Combined Rinks to Be Studied

Mayor Frances Elford said in an interview Tuesday Oak Bay would be willing to discuss with Saanich an exploratory suggestion that central private ice arena facilities be provided in the area.

She joined Saanich Ald. Fred Severson in supporting an orientation visit to Burnaby where Columbia 4-Rinks Ltd. is erecting the largest arena complex ever built under one roof. Columbian is doing a feasibility study of Greater Victoria's ice requirements and capacity to use additional facilities.

Both municipalities are also studying the possibility of building publicly-owned arena facilities and Saanich is committed to putting a borrowing bylaw to ratepayers at the earliest opportunity.

Severson said that with ice-time demand rising throughout the region, the Columbia prospect could mean a chance to solve the minor hockey problems of four municipalities.

"I'm not backing off the referendum; I'm intrigued by it (the Columbian investigation). I would want to take a long look at this," Severson said, suggesting now is an opportune time to discuss joint facilities with Oak Bay.

He said four new rinks in Greater Victoria would probably be too much, but suggested three in a single complex could be practicable for Columbian to construct.

Mayor Elford favors a municipally-run rink for the first one in the community. "My greatest concern is community use," she said, suggesting that with a privately-operated undertaking the maximum use by all groups could not be controlled directly by the council.

She said a degree of subsidization might be acceptable for a private operation.

"I would be quite willing to have a look at what this privately-owned facility would provide," Elford said.

But she also thought she would "hold out" for a community-owned facility. "Given the right mixture on council next month (after local elections) we could go ahead with a recreation centre as early as January," the mayor said. She called the proposed community complex on Foul Bay "the most important issue we have in Oak Bay right now." But it depends on the sale of Victoria Riding Academy property on Cedar Hill Cross Road as a quality medium to high density apartment site.

Toronto Finds Secret Site For Garbage

TORONTO (CP) — Metropolitan Toronto has agreed to have CP Rail haul its garbage somewhere else, but won't say where it expects it to be dumped.

"There is no sense stirring up a lot of towns and cities," Metro Chairman Albert Campbell told council.

When a final agreement is signed with CP Rail, the company would be expected to reveal the dump sites, he said.

Works Commissioner Ross Clark was authorized Tuesday to negotiate the first stage of the agreement with CP Rail, in a plan to dump 400,000 tons of garbage annually at 2,000 acres of unnamed dumps.

The plan calls for the rail line to haul the garbage at $6.40 a ton or more than $2.5 million a year.

Mr. Clark said rail hauling is only one method of disposing of garbage from large urban centres.

He said the federal government is studying removal of garbage from cities by pipeline.

Dispenser Linked With Polio

GREENWICH, Conn. (UPI) — A federal health official said a contaminated drink dispenser in a Daycroft school locker room may have caused an outbreak of polio at the school last month.

It was disclosed Tuesday that the fruit juice dispenser, equipped with a spray cooling system similar to those found in commercial establishments, may have been the common source for the 11 polio cases originating at the school.

Dr. Dewayne Andrews, a federal epidemiologist assigned to the state health department, said the spray arm in the dispenser was broken, causing students to mix the juice with a stick or their hands.

None of the students at the school located on the former campus of the Rosemary Hall school, had received polio immunization because of religious beliefs.

Anik Eyes Mackenzie Pipeline as Access to World

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to The Times

OTTAWA — Telesat Canada has offered to supply an all-weather communications system for the length of the proposed Mackenzie Valley oil and gas pipeline, including segments of the pipeline in the United States, using the just-launched Anik 1 communications satellite.

And this is the major reason why Telesat Canada plans to ask the federal government "within a few weeks" to broaden Telsat's mandate and allow the corporation to provide communications services with its Anik network to points outside of Canada, according to a senior Telesat official.

"We would not want to be precluded from operating that sort of a communications system, as we are now limited by law, just because a small end section of a pipeline extends beyond Canada's borders," Henry de Puyjalon, Telesat vice-president for planning and marketing said in an interview just minutes after the successful launching Thursday evening of Anik 1.

The cost of a "coherent and total communications system" for such a pipeline would be "millions of dollars a year," he said. Technical and cost details were given to the Northwest Study Group by Telesat, and the offer stands for whoever ends up building the pipeline, Mr. de Puyjalon suggested.

At the same time, he confirmed that the economics of making it possible for the Americans to use Anik, to tide the U.S. over until it can get its own communications satellite system working, are probably more attractive and closer at hand than the Mackenzie Valley pipeline considerations.

Mr. de Puyjalon confirmed that all 12 channels of Anik 2, which is to be launched in April, will be made available to U.S. users.

And, should the demand be sufficient, Telesat will now even consider launching Anik 3 into orbit. Anik 3, also with 12 channels on board, is supposed to be the ground back-up that would be launched should Anik 1 or 2 fail.

With three satellites in orbit, the total capacity available commercially would be 34 television channels: 10 channels on Anik 1, with 2 channels as backup, for the Canadian system; and 24 channels on the other satellites, most likely for U.S. use, at least until a U.S. system is working. That could mean more than three times the profits Telesat originally expected from Anik.

Telesat officials note that Canadian customers of Anik will be given first priority and would on a potentially-interruptible basis, in case Anik 1 failed.

But the Mackenzie Valley pipeline proposition and the prospects for sizeable U.S. use of Anik are not the only reasons for Telesat wanting to broaden its mandate.

Mr. de Puyjalon says that when the Anik system is working, Canada will have a knowhow "unique in the world" and will have a "unique export on its hands."

Telesat, he suggested, might be able to sell its experience to other countries, such as Australia, China, South Africa, Brazil and the U.S., with similar communications needs.

Finally, Telesat is now discussing with U.S. interests the feasibility of future inter-connections between Canadian and U.S. communications satellite systems, and the possibility of having Canadian and U.S. satellites backing each other up, in case of technical failure.

There will be some considerable delay before the necessary changes, if approved, can be made by Parliament.

One problem is that Parliament is now not thought to meet again until early January.

Since any changes in the Telesat Act must remain tabled in the Commons for at least 30 days, to allow comment and debate, then it would be February at the earliest before the changes could be approved. Telesat officials are thinking more of approval by March.

But already, a bigger question is looming on the horizon: should Telsat be allowed to service customers outside of Canada?

Telesat officials argue that, if the demand appears, it is good corporate logic to meet it. The note that Canada is the only country that will have such a service for at least two more years. And they add that Telesat has a mandate to be profitable.

U.S. Unions 'Intimidate'

MONTREAL (CP) — Jerome Choquette, Quebec justice minister, has been asked "to stop the intimidation" by United States-based unions during recruiting drives by rival unions at construction sites in Quebec, a Montreal labor leader said Monday.

Michel Bourdon, an official of the Montreal Construction Union, an affiliate of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, told a news conference his union sent a telegram to Choquette Friday asking him "to intervene quickly."

The American unions are members of the Quebec Federation of Labor. The two federations and the Centrale des Syndicats Democratiques are engaged in an official recruiting drive at construction sites which allows them to try to persuade members of other federations to switch allegiance until Dec. 12.

TORTOISE SEARCH OFF AND RUNNING

FARNBOROUGH, England (UPI) — Builder Howard Hilder can start work on construction of a housing project as soon as he fulfills one clause in the $250,000 contract which he signed when he purchased the building site.

He said he first must search the site and find the former owner's pet tortoise.

Benefits Of Pipe Outlined

By WALTER KREVENCHUK

EDMONTON (CP) — Few people understand exactly what a natural gas pipeline in the Arctic will mean to Canada, says Lionel Montpetit, executive vice-president of Northern Transportation Co. Ltd.

But the impact on industry will undoubtedly be tremendous, Mr. Montpetit said in an interview.

"You can't start to spend this amount of money—billions of dollars—without affecting shipyards, manufacturing plants, assembly shops, lumber, water craft, contractors, the steel industry . . . it affects everybody."

The main beneficiaries, he said, will be Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

"If the development of the North measures up to what we think it is going to be there will be requirements for all modes of transportation—air, road, rail and barge—it's that big. . . . I don't think Canada has seen anything like it."

Mr. Montpetit said the whole Canadian transportation industry is on the verge of going through a tremendous growth pattern. A huge transportation system is going to be required to satisfy the construction of the pipeline and "we're convinced that we're not talking about one pipeline."

AT CRISIS STAGE

"We're probably talking about a continuous series of pipelines because the demand for energy has reached crisis proportions. The emphasis so far has been placed on the gas rather than the oil but that doesn't change the fact that the oil is still there and it has got to come out."

Northern Transportation, as a federal Crown corporation involved in river transportation into the Western Arctic, was conscious of the importance of what was taking place.

Mr. Montpetit said the tonnages of material that will have to be moved to the pipeline site "are fantastic in terms of our interpretation" —800,000 tons of pipe alone— "and that does not involve the natural growth which this is going to bring about."

Northern Transportation is already preparing to meet the challenge. "We're upgrading our shore facilities at Hay River," where the railway joins the corporation's barge system on the Mackenzie River, and improving warehouse and other facilities at Inuvik.

"We've spent millions and we've still got millions to spend."

KEY ARTERY

Mr. Montpetit said that from a timing standpoint the Mackenzie River must be the backbone of material movement for the pipeline, at least for the first one.

He said the all-weather highway about to be built to the Arctic coast will not be able to "serve the role that some people think it will in the time that we're talking about." Construction on the pipeline is expected to start in 1975-76 and be completed within three years.

"This is a difficult country and roads are not going to be built overnight," Mr. Montpetit said. But he added that roads are necessary to development of the North.

"They are a natural evolution needed to give true access to the ocean and to perpetuate an access that already exists."

Northern Transportation will have to build a new fleet to handle movements for the pipeline.

"Our present fleet, under ideal conditions, could handle up to 500,000 tons. This year we should be handling somewhere between 375,000 and 400,000 tons and we think there will be another surge in growth next year so we'll have to build more equipment."

But Mr. Montpetit said the corporation can't start to build a barge and tug fleet to meet pipeline requirements until the day "we're told that it's required . . . the economics just don't permit you to do this."

200 Fish

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thirty members of the Vancouver Aquarium Association have returned from a three-week tour of the South Seas with 20 crates of 200 fish. Gil Hewlett, expedition leader and curator of the aquarium, said the fish would go on display early next week.

Individual Crisis Remains Despite Abortion Rise

By DAVID MAY
Times Staff

In the space of two years, the number of abortions performed in Canada has almost trebled, from 11,152 in 1970 to 30,949 in 1971.

Volume of cases may be increasing, but the dilemma of the individual woman facing abortion versus conception remains the same. Where can she go for help, and how can she be sure of the advice she receives?

Mrs. M. was 39, separated from her husband and supporting three children on a professional's salary of $11,000 a year when she discovered she was pregnant.

"When I found out, I was horrified at the problem looming ahead," she said in an interview.

Money Problem

But it was the economic uncertainty of her future, not the coming baby, that scared Mrs. M. She lived in a small town, was conscious of high unemployment in her profession and didn't know how her employers would react to her predicament.

She was also afraid her husband might take her plight as a means of gaining custody of their children.

When she went to the doctor in the town where she lived, he recommended abortion.

"I hadn't even suggested it," Mrs. M. said.

That night, she decided to take her chances — and keep the baby.

Her decision cost her a job, meant she had to move out of the town where she lived, go on welfare and live for almost a year in what she described as "pretty shabby surroundings."

Mrs. M.'s son is now one year old. She is working again and has managed to keep her family together. If asked to give another woman advice on abortion-conception, she would try to persuade the woman to have the baby and then have it adopted, if future support was impossible.

Mrs. M. claims that, in her experience, "doctors do not have time to discuss the emotional and legal angles (of having an abortion)."

In her case she had no friends or relatives to turn to for advice. It was Birthright, a volunteer organization, that offered her help.

Victoria Times
THIRD SECTION family
WENDY DEY — EDITOR

Birthright, she claimed, gives a woman the support she needs when making a decision that requires speed and a full awareness of its implications for the woman concerned.

But Birthright has its limitations.

It has only two branches in this province, one in Victoria, the other in Vancouver. Communication can be difficult unless the client moves to one of the two cities, as Mrs. M. did.

As with any other organization depending on voluntary support, Birthright cannot always manage to do all it promises for its clients. In Mrs. M.'s case, accommodation in Victoria, arranged by the group, fell through on her arrival, pregnant and with three children, in a strange town.

The most telling criticism of Birthright, however, is that it is anti-abortion from the start.

Mrs. M. doesn't consider this much of a problem today — a year after her own crisis. She says now that she contemplated abortion "only in the same way you might say 'I'm going to commit suicide.'"

But pro-abortionist groups say that Birthright can work against the interests of the individual, by ruling against abortion from the outset.

Elizabeth Murrison, of the Abortion Counselling Service, is "very pro-abortion," but argues that the "woman should have the final say."

Mrs. Murrison, whose volunteer work began two years ago when she personally sought an abortion, estimates that between 800 and 1,000 women have used her service since its founding in 1969. She has no idea what proportion actually went through with the operation, however, as many of the contacts may not, in fact, have been pregnant.

Mrs. Murrison advises her callers to have a pregnancy test done, discusses reasons for and against an abortion with them and, if they ask, she will give them the names of four local doctors, known to be sympathetic to abortions.

She also prepares women for the type of personal questions a doctor is likely to ask.

"I tell them the things to tell the doctor (to ensure an abortion)" she says, adding that if a client is rejected in Victoria, she "can usually help them in the U.S. (in states where abortion is performed on demand)".

Mrs. Murrison says that 1972 has been "quieter" as far as calls on abortion counselling are concerned. This, she says, indicates that more doctors are processing abortion applicants themselves.

Doctors 'Great'

She says the medical profession in Victoria "has been great" on abortion counselling. The only exceptions she makes are those doctors "who oppose abortion, but won't refer a patient elsewhere."

Dr. Dorothy Fisher, chairman of the Victoria branch of the Family Planning Association of British Columbia, says that, while the FPA does support the repeal of the section of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion, it does not look upon the operation as a means of birth control.

When giving advice to a pregnant woman, the FPA "explains the alternatives," says Fisher, "and abortion is one of them. Ideally, however, we want to eliminate the need for abortion altogether."

In cases where an abortion is carried out, the doctor says, "an effort is then made to follow up with birth control advice.

"Family life would be better if it was limited to the capabilities, both physical and emotional, of the parents concerned," Fisher concluded.

Dr. Philip Ney, a psychiatrist and self-confessed opponent of abortion, says the rare cases of post abortion counselling he does encounter always involve "the guilt associated with abortion."

Ney says it is more than social conditioning that brings on these guilt feelings after the event.

"There are strong hormonal changes that take place in a pregnant woman. These are built in by nature, to promote the mothering instinct . . . they also alter the psychological characteristics of a woman."

To disturb these changes, as is done when a fetus is aborted, brings on a process of mourning, followed by anger directed at the self for having killed something the mother has come to love, says Ney.

"The term 'therapeutic abortion' will soon be dropped," he says, "and be replaced by 'induced abortion.'"

There is no such thing as a therapeutic abortion, the psychologist argues — when performed, it is for "social convenience, not therapy."

An abortion is a life experience that changes you whether you like it or not, says Ney. He would rather counsel a woman to have her baby and then have it adopted. Adoption, he says, is a "growing experience," as opposed to the terminal nature of an abortion.

—Dave Glover sketch

Abortion is often a woman's loneliest choice

Soon, however, the whole abortion-conception battle may become no more than a historical cause celebre.

A recent article in the New Statesman discussed the emergence of the prostaglandins, substances which he terms "abortion pills (which will make it) possible for a woman to avoid motherhood by taking a pill whenever a period is overdue."

If she takes it soon enough, the article says, "she will not know whether she has aborted or not" — and then, presumably, Ney's guilt-ridden patients will dwindle into the manuals of psychiatric history.

Law, Unions Feel Lash Of Waffle Women

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian law and trade unions came in for criticism during a recent conference of the Toronto Waffle Women's Group.

Susan Perley of Halifax, author of Women and the Law in Nova Scotia, told a session that Canadian law is loaded against women and little help can be expected from the legal profession.

"The lawyers are not interested in the oppressed, and because they are mostly men, they have less interest in the law for women," Miss Perley told the Toronto women's group of the Ontario Waffle Movement for an Independent Socialist Canada.

In another session, Yvonne Trowler, who has worked in the trade union movement during such periods as the organization of workers at the Alcan Aluminum smelter at Kitimat, B.C., said unions must open executive positions to women if they are to live to their policies of giving quality to all members.

Mrs. Perley, in her criticism of Canadian law, warned women not to be lulled into false security when laws such as equal pay for equal work are passed because such laws are rarely enforced.

"They are passed to keep us happy — a little law here and a little law there."

Miss Perley, who is not a lawyer, said she had approached the profession in Nova Scotia to gather, in one reference book, laws which affect women.

"They said it would be a tremendous job and couldn't be done in less than two years," she said.

She said the research was carried out under a federal Local Initiatives Project by a research team in less than a year.

"It is ironical, but the Dalhousie law school now uses the book," she said.

UNIVERSITY SYSTEM CLAIMED TO BE 'JUNGLE'

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario's university system "is just an unco-ordinated jungle," the president of Laurentian University of Sudbury told the province's committee of university affairs this week.

E. J. Monahan said in a brief that an advisory report to the government earlier this year recommended giving Laurentian campuses in North Bay and Sault Ste. Marie independence, but Laurentian in Sudbury was never consulted before the report was made.

Laurentian, in existence 12 years and with 12,000 full-time students, is one of the newer Ontario universities hit by dropping enrolment.

In a meeting with committee, which advises the government on university policy, Dr. Monahan said "either the level of financing is increased or the number of programs is reduced."

He said about half of Laurentian's students come from outside the Sudbury area and between one in six and one in nine Sudbury residents who go to university to not go to Laurentian.

At the meeting, Dr. Monahan produced a magazine which he said is distributed through most Ontario high schools. He said the centre spread was an $8,500, 16-page advertisement for the University of Waterloo.

He said $8,500 "is what we pay for the full salary of our only high school liaison officer. . . . This is the kind of competition the university system could ruddy well do witout."

Earlier, David Slater, president of Toronto's York University, said unless changes are made in the way universities are financed, "a nasty, brutish, predatory" scramble for students will develop.

He said university incomes should be stabilized, and he suggested changes in the grants formula which would give a minimum guaranteed income to universities for the next two years.

The government, he suggested, should be advised to firm up the financing situation by creating a two-year forecasting system to allow income stabilization.

Dr. Slater, an economist, said the present system, which pays grants based on actual enrolment of Dec. 1, should be replaced with one which gives ". . . a reasonable period of time to adjust to enrolment fluctuations."

New Forum Symptom 'Of Pretty Sick Society'

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

Feminine Forum, a new program for "ladies only" broadcast each weekday morning at 9:05 by CJVI, has been condemned by housewives, women's rights leaders and a marriage counsellor surveyed by The Times.

The program urges women to call the station with opinions about "a great many things you might not even discuss with your mother."

Topics are usually "sensational" and sex-oriented. Callers are asked to relate their personal experiences in coping with such problems as the other woman or premarital sex.

'Sex Reared Its Head'

Power recently asked women to confess their reaction the first time "sex reared its head in a premarital relationship."

"Did you say yes?" he asked a woman caller. "If you did, how do you justify it?," he asked.

Other topics include: What is it you like about a man? Is sex a problem in your marriage? and Is sex love to you?

The program copies a successful format originated by Bill Balance of station KGBS, Los Angeles. Balance asks listeners such questions as: "What really turns you on?"

One woman answered this question with: "What really turns me on is doing my housework nude wearing a football helmet."

Merlene Pollard: 'Handled Wrong'

Balance has been known to tell listeners: "If you're involved in the romantic agony of hopeless love, stay with me today, my darling, for my entire five hours, and I'll have you cooing contentedly like a passionate pouter pigeon."

He claims catering to the fantasies and insecurities of his "dolls" and "fillies" amounts to a public service.

Power, however, says that although his program follows the L.A. format, Victoria isn't ready for such "nitty gritty" topics as "what do you do to turn your man on?" or "what happens after 11 p.m. in your bed?"

"We deal with sex in a lighter way," Power said, adding the program would like to air "sensational" topics women "are afraid to discuss."

Not surprisingly, women's liberationists are furious about these kinds of programs. The National Organization of Women (NOW) recently gave the U.S. prototype its "Keep Her in Her Place" award.

Terry Reksten: 'Just Dreadful'

But in Victoria, it wasn't just women liberationists who said the program "degrades" women.

Mrs. Merlene Pollard, 40, the owner-manager of Island Subscription Agency, said the program is a good idea but has the wrong attitude toward women.

She believes there is a need for a program that gives women at home a chance to discuss ideas. Feminine Forum, however, "isn't handled properly."

For example, she described a recent program where the moderator asked housewives what they thought of "sexy office girls out to seduce your husband."

"They seem to be pitting women against women," Mrs. Pollard said.

"The only interesting thing about it is trying to figure out what the planners can have been thinking," Mrs. Reksten said.

"The whole concept is incredible. I would never call in and I don't know anyone who would even listen. Why spend time on that kind of junk?"

She thinks the program is aimed at the kind of woman who is only interested in her immediate home environment and "waits all day for her husband to come home."

Mrs. Noni Preston, 40, vice-president of the Status of Women Action Group (SWAG), says she wrote a letter of encouragement when the program first went on the air two months ago.

Since then she has been turned off by "the banal pap and Playboy-type fantasy" that make up the program.

"The triviality of subjects chosen rules out any worthwhile discussion," Mrs. Preston said.

"Poor kid," she said, "it must be boring for him to have to listen."

'A Devastating Experience'

Mrs. Wolff believes calling in and telling all could be "a devastating experience for anyone with real problems."

She believes callers and listeners have something in common with voyeurs and exhibitionists.

Mrs. Wolff is concerned about the woman who feels all alone, calls the program and bitterly regrets doing so.

"She will be terribly upset, vulnerable and terrified of being recognized," Mrs. Wolff said. "It could really hurt such a person."

She urges people with problems to call NEED (Victoria's telephone line for people in emotional crisis) instead of Feminine Forum.

"NEED volunteers are trained to listen, and their warmth and understanding can help," Mrs. Wolff said.

Mrs. Ruff thinks the program exploits women for the sake of entertainment.

"It's the most demeaning program I've ever heard. Women are treated as stereotypes.

"I can't imagine a station putting on a program for men with a woman moderator to discuss male sex problems," Mrs. Ruff said.

Neither can moderator Power.

"Men are the stronger sex," he said. "I can't see them breaking up over a sex problem and calling a female."

Power doesn't agree that his program isolates women in a special category all their own.

"I never call them females," he said. "I always call them chicks or dolls. I want them to be human."

Married Woman Wants to Look Over Prospects

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My best friend, a 40-year-old divorcee with two children, joined Parents Without Partners last year. She met a swell man there (a widower with three children) and they are being married soon, and I am so envious I am ashamed of myself.

I would love to join Parents Without Partners and meet a nice gentleman with a family who wants to meet a nice lady with children.

I am 42 and have three wonderful sons who need a father. The problem is I am still married. My husband is never home and I am tired of being both mother and father. If I could find a man who really wanted to stay home and be a family man I would leave the one I'm married to so fast he wouldn't know what hit him.

I wonder if anyone has ever joined that club just to look over the prospects?—Parent With No Partner

DEAR PARENT: Sorry, but you don't qualify for membership in Parents Without Partners, because technically you HAVE a partner. I suggest you get some counselling to improve your marital relationship, and get that silent partner of yours to sing a more co-operative tune. Widows and divorcees have enough competition without married women who would like a change.

DEAR ABBY: I am 79, and I am NOT senile, but something has puzzled me since my teens. I was secretary to a psychiatrist for many years, but could never pick up the courage to ask him about my problem, if you can call it a problem. (Unfortunely, he is dead now.)

I can "see" things that are not there. For instance, I glance down on the floor, and in the figured linoleum pattern I can actually "see" an animal, bird, or the profile of a person! At times I can look again and see the same image, and at other times, no matter how hard I try to see that image again, I can't.

These are not just crazy lines all over the linoleum, yet at a glance they go together to form a distinct image. I can do this with numerous things. I "see" images in trees, whose leaves are swaying in the breeze, in clouds, and in some hodge-podge modern paintings. And if I look a moment later, the images I clearly saw are gone forever.

Can you explain this?—Still-Puzzled

DEAR PUZZLED: The images are conjured up by your imagination, and I dare say there is not a person alive who has not had the same experience, so don't let it bother you.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Thursday, Nov. 16, 1972
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cycle moves up — stress natural qualities of originality, independence. Family member will appreciate new approach. State needs and desires. Much of what you request will be made available.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What appeared to be a difficult situation could become a laughing matter. Throw off tendency to fear the unknown. Stress versatility. Be aware of alternatives. Express ideas. Get thoughts on paper.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent now is on friendships which play meaningful roles. You will be able to put puzzle pieces in place. Aid is due from unorthodox source. Be receptive. Scorpio person is in picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Change now could result in greater prestige. Know it and act accordingly. Professional superior is willing to make room for you at top. Gemini and Virgo persons could figure prominently. Express confidence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Soft-sell brings best results. If you are overbearing, you lose. Choice should be one which leads to diplomatic approach. Family member can become valuable ally. Know it and plan accordingly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't be afraid to look inward. Be truthful with yourself. Constructive criticism is in order. Money situation is out of your hands. Know it and refuse to be charged with another's responsibility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Time is on your side. Outline project, goal. Perceive what others want or will probably do. Your judgment will eventually prove accurate. For now, wait and observe. You need not rush.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish what you start. Obtain valid hint from Libra message. Steady pace is important. Don't neglect basic services. One who depends on you does intend to repay. Know it and soften approach.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good lunar aspect now coincides with romance, creative activity, relationships with young persons. Stress originality, independence of thought and action. Leo could play key role.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Home ties, responsibilities to older individuals are featured. Be cautious. Conservative line now can result in better price for product. Cancer individual could help you with real estate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent is on movement, travel, spirited discussion involving Gemini. Social activity is apt to accelerate. Expand horizons. See beyond the immediate. You may have to give special attention to diet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Steady approach means more money — don't veer from basic goal. One who is impatient also is likely to be misinformed. Take inventory. Be aware of budget requirements. Pay and collect. Count change!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY —You are serious, introspective, creative. You embarked on new project this year and July was a key month. A more secure home atmosphere is upcoming. You possess an extraordinary amount of intuitive intellect. You perceive what is about to occur in 1973, you will have delightful choice — between romance and money and more of same.

Sexual Equality Old Hat For Oregon Pioneer Pair

Present day women's lib groups should be interested in knowing that down in Oregon in the mid-1800s there was equality between husbands and wives — at least in connection with acquiring land.

Amongst historical tidbits brought back from that state recently by Jean Thompson, curator at Craigflower Manor here, is a well authenticated anecdote about the passage of a Donation Land Law by Congress in 1850.

It gave pioneers who had settled prior to Dec. 1, 1850, 640 acres of land; one-half to the husband and one-half to the wife.

One of the first couples to file for their donation land claim was James and Julia Bybee. They received 642.21 acres located on Sauvie Island — now almost a suburb of the city of Portland.

Made a Fortune

When the Bybees filed their claim, James was away in the California goldfields where, incidentally, he made a fortune.

He didn't return to his wife and family until 1854 and it was another two years (in 1856) before he and Julia began construction of their home, facing what was then called Multnomah Channel (now the Willamette River).

Jean Thompson visited that home (restored by the Oregon Historical Society and now listed as the oldest standing residence on Sauvie Island) when she and husband Gerry were vacationining in Oregon recently.

In telling me of that "exciting experience" she said it's evident Julia Ann Bybee did much of the planning and overseeing when the two-storey, nine-room frame house was built.

She bases that thought on records preserved by the historical society and showing that after he returned from California, James, who was born in Kentucky, spent most of his time acquiring thoroughbred horses.

And it is a well known fact that at the time the Bybee house was being erected in 1856, his main interest was in directing workmen toward completion of a large race track in another part of the property.

Horses remained his absorbing interest from then on and at the time of his death in 1901, he was known on the Pacific Coast as the King of the Oregon Turf.

The Bybees lived only a few years in the new home before selling it to their nearest neighbors, pioneers Dr. Bejamin Howell and his wife Elizabeth who had come from New Jersey in 1850 and settled their donation land claim on Sauvie Island in 1854.

Members of the Howell family owned the property until 1961 when it was sold to the Multnomah County to preserve and maintain as an historical park.

It was then that the Oregon Historical Society became interested in restoration of the mid-19th century territorial home.

Hours of Work

In her enthusiastic way Jean Thompson tells of the hundreds of hours of research, study and detailing that went into that restoration.

"Layers and layers of paint were removed," she said, "to discover something approaching the original interior colors of the house.

"Scores of volunteers worked for two years to clean the house and grounds of accumulations of time.

"Fabrics and papers were re-designed and colored to preserve the mood of the late 1850s and to give a new insight into a little known period of Oregon's social history."

It was in 1967 that, furnished to reflect the pre-Civil War era of pioneer life, this historic home (by then named the Bybee-Howell House) was opened to the public.

It stands in the luxuriant 130 acres of Howell Territorial Park. A well balanced program continues to develop the acreage both historically and scenically.

Already typical 19th century foundation planting has been done around the house. A part of the garden is devoted to native Oregon plants, shrubs and trees and there is an Oregon pioneer orchard planted with fruit trees descended from those found around pioneer homes in the 1850s.

For the Free Asking

By HARRIET HART

We cannot help being terrified about the possibility of some day being stricken by cancer. Most of our anxiety is due to the many unanswered questions we have regarding this often fatal disease.

The 16-page "Answers To Your Questions About Cancer" replies to 57 questions concerning nature, cause, distribution, diagnosis, treatment and prevention of cancer.

The booklet assures readers that this dreaded malady is neither contagious nor infectious and that a child whose parents have died from cancer is no more likely to develop cancer than any other child.

The question whether cancer is more frequent among married or among single women cannot be answered with a simple "yes" or "no." Single women are more likely to develop breast cancer than mothers who have nursed their children. On the other hand, cancer of the cervix is more frequent in women who have borne children.

The book also mentions that thanks to abundant research the spread of certain types of cancer can now sometimes be stopped or temporarily retarded. It also reveals that according to authoritative estimates up to 80% of all cancers could be prevented through the lifetime co-operation of the entire population.

Serve Peach Custard Pie the Day It's Made

By MARY MOORE

Believe it or not lots of homemakers still continue the practice of "baking day".

The recipe for today is for a peach coconut custard pie which is a year-round pie for the peaches are canned. It is easy to make and comparatively cheap but looks and tastes lovely. It should be served on the day it is made.

PEACH COCONUT CUSTARD PIE
(9-inch)

Pastry: 1¼ c. sifted cake and pastry flour
½ tsp. salt
One-third c. shortening
2 tbsp. hard butter
1 to 2 tbsp. cold water
Filling: 1¼ c. (14-oz. can) sliced peaches
½ c. sugar
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. nutmeg
3 beaten eggs
1 and one-third c. undiluted evaporated milk
1 c. water
1 tsp. vanilla
½ c. flake coconut

To make the pastry cut the shortening and butter into the flour and salt with a pastry blender until size of peas. Drizzle in water tossing with a fork until you can pack it into a ball between your palms.

Roll out on well-floured board to less than one eighth-inch thickness. Line deep 9-inch pie plate and shape a high fluted edge.

To make filling drain peaches and use juice for a fruit cup for future meal. Reserve 12 slices for garnish. Dice remaining peaches.

Combine sugar, salt, nutmeg, eggs, evaporated milk, water and vanilla. Beat until thoroughly mixed. Add diced peaches and coconut. Slowly pour into pie shell.

Bake at 425 deg. Fahr. 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 350 deg. Fahr. and continue baking about 25 to 35 minutes longer or until knife inserted at centre comes out clean.

Sex Criminals' 'Field Day'

MONTREAL (CP) — Sex crimes involving young people are on the increase in Quebec and police are warning youngsters against hitchiking between school and home. Sexual offenders are having a "field day" because of the hitchiking trend, said Const. Real Cantara of the Quebec Provincial Police youth and sexual crimes squad.

Pickets Halt Work On Glenora Airport

Duncan Bureau
Phone: 746-6181

DUNCAN — A group of Glenora residents plan to halt work on a local airport for a second day today by occupying the construction site.

And they'll continue picketing for an indefinite period, said Shirley Stewart, spokesman for the 30 picketers who halted bulldozers Tuesday.

"We don't want this area used as an airport," Mrs. Stewart said today. "We want it kept rural."

The airport is being built by the Cowichan Airport Society on 40 acres of crown land for which it received a five-year lease in November 1971 from Cowichan Valley Regional Board.

Resident protests against the airport have been strong for many months, but the regional board now has no power to stop construction of the airport.

"There's not one damn thing at the present time you can do about it," said William Wyllie, chairman of the regional board.

Any action to stop construction of the airport must come from resident groups, he said.

"This'll come to a head now with the people picketing," Wyllie said.

Tuesday's picketers, mainly women and children, had no trouble stopping the bulldozer that had begun work.

"Poor fellow, he thought, here's these crazy women coming out of the bushes," said Mrs. Stewart.

He abandoned his bulldozer and went home.

Residents feel a Glenora airport isn't necessary when people can use the airport in Cassidy south of Nanaimo, said Mrs. Stewart, They also object to the noise of an airport.

"It's almost as if it (the airport) were shoved down our throats," she said. "We were never consulted."

She blames the regional board for "lack of homework" before they committed themselves to giving land to the airport society.

MAN CHARGED IN RAIL BLAST

DUNCAN — A 21-year-old Duncan man was charged in provincial court here Tuesday with setting off an explosion "liable to injure life or cause property damage."

The charge against Clifford Lundgren involves an explosion which damaged a trestle on a section of the CNR between Youbou and Lake Cowichan.

RCMP said the blast splintered ties and weakened the structure which could have collapsed if a train passed over.

Lundgren was remanded 30 days pending a psychiatric examination and report.

Saanich Man Injured First Day on the Job

A 21-year-old Saanich man was injured Monday in a 40-foot fall.

Keith Pearce, of 1475 Douglas, was working his first day with Rolston Construction on an apartment site at Burnside and Harriet. He was on the fourth-floor ceiling of the building when he stepped backwards and fell, landing in dirt.

As he fell, he struck a scaffold support 30 feet above the ground which cut his upper and lower right leg.

Hollywood Plots Revival Of Biographical Movies

By BOB THOMAS

The film biography was a Hollywood staple for 30 years, with such stars as George Arliss, Paul Muni and Spencer Tracy portraying famous figures. But such films went into a decline when the industry fell into its economic decline. Reasons:

1. Biographies usually require costumes, big sets and crowd scenes, which the studios can ill afford.

2. Producers believed that young movie-goers, who comprise the major part of the audience, cared naught about history and yearned for "now" films.

That thinking has changed. Most of the "now" flicks have bombed, while such biographies as Funny Girl and Patton have made millions. Producers have gotten the message, and these subjects are in release or production:

Hitler, The Last 10 Days, with Alec Guinness as the dying dictator.

Picketing Ends At Board Offices

Picketing of Greater Victoria school district offices Tuesday was prompted by "constant breaches of the collective agreement," Fred Newell, president of Local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said today.

He disagreed with school trustee Peter Bunn, who said earlier it was a pressure tactic in current negotiations for a new contract.

The picketing, which extended to the district's maintenance depot and Camosun College, ended late Tuesday after a meeting between union leaders and district superintendent A. J. Longmore and other officials. Another meeting will be held Tuesday.

"It was a multitude of things built up over two years," said Newell, including breaches of contract, "unfair treatment of the workers and threats of dismissals for the slightest cause."

Bunn, however, said these charges are "nonsense" and that union members are well treated by the administration and had excellent working conditions.

NO SUSPICION OF ARSON

An inspector from the Provincial Fire Marshall's office in Vancouver said today arson is not suspected in the fire which early Tuesday destroyed Salt Spring Island's Harbor House Hotel.

Inspector A. H. Taylor, sent to Ganges shortly after the fire, said, however, he hasn't determined the cause and his investigation will take several days.

The Vancouver office confirmed there were no suspicious circumstances surrounding the blaze, adding that the Ganges fire chief and RCMP requested a fire marshall's report as routine procedure.

BULLET HIT BRAIN

NANAIMO (CP) — Trial of William George McFadden, 56, of Ladysmith, on a non-capital murder charge, opened in Supreme Court Tuesday morning with evidence from a Nanaimo pathologist.

Dr. R. S. Clarke, who performed an autopsy on the body of Charles Herbert Lumley, said the cause of death was a bullet through the brain.

Mr. Lumley was shot June 6 in a beer parlour at Ladysmith.

Ivan Dergousoff, a resident of the hotel at the time of the shooting, told the court he saw McFadden get out of a taxi in front of the hotel June 6 and that the accused was carrying a rifle.

The witness said he was on his way downstairs when someone handed him a rifle, which he kept in his room until the police came for it. Mr. Dergousoff identified a .22-calibre rifle as the one handed to him on the evening of June 6.

Vote Fingers Election Kibitzers—$200 Apiece

By CARL MOLLINS

OTTAWA (CP) — By the workings of electoral law, more than half the candidates in the Oct. 30 federal election have in effect been designated kibitzers. Their $200 nomination deposits have been forfeited.

The list includes a candidate supported by almost 17,000 voters and 113 members of the two biggest parties.

In all, 591 of the record 1,117 candidates lost the $200 deposit that each would-be MP must hand over upon nomination as a sign of seriousness.

The deposit, cash or certified cheque, is returned to winners and to a loser who polls at least half as many votes as the winner in a constituency. Otherwise, it goes "to Her Majesty for the public uses of Canada" (the federal treasury).

The failure of 591 hopefuls to get at least half as many votes as those who beat them means the federal treasury is richer by $118,200—a small contribution towards the estimated $16 million cost of running the election.

But New Democrat David Warner, for example, loses his $200 even though he collected almost 17,000 votes—enough to win in more than half the constituencies of Canada, but sufficient only for third place in the huge Toronto-area riding of York-Scarborough. Winner Robert Stanbury, communications minister, polled more than 39,000 votes there.

SOME ODD CONTRASTS

By contrast, Liberal Don Branigan gets his $200 back although he gathered only 2,626 votes in the Yukon. Conservative winner Erik Nielsen got 4,326 in that small-population constituency.

Other tidbits turned up in a study of results:

—Seven out of 10 New Democrats lost their deposits—175 of the party's 251 candidates. The $35,000 forfeited included the deposits of all NDP candidates in Alberta, Quebec, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island.

—Social Credit, trying to establish itself nationally with candidates in every province, was out of the serious running everywhere but in 33 Quebec ridings. In all, 133 of 166 Social Credit candidates lost their deposits, retaining them only in the 15 ridings won and in 18 other Quebec seats.

—Eighty-four Progressive Conservatives lost their deposits—three in 10 of the 264 candidates. Sixty-five of the party's 74 candidates in Quebec lost their money, 11 of the 88 in Ontario.

—Liberals suffered the smallest losses—29 of 263 candidates lost deposits, 18 of them in the three Prairie provinces.

—All but three of the 173 candidates who ran for smaller parties or as independents lost their deposits. The exceptions were Lucien Lamoureux, winner in Stormont-Dundas, Ont.; independent Roch La Salle, winner in Joliette, Que., and Frank Hanley, former independent member of the Quebec National Assembly, who finished second in the Montreal-St. Henri.

ROCK SLIDES

Among deposits lost was that of Raymond Rock, who won Montreal-Lachine as a Liberal in 1968 with almost 26,000 of the 40,000-odd votes in that riding. This time, as a Conservative, he was cut to 11,357 of more than 46,000 votes in Lachine, losing to Liberal Rod Blaker's 26,904.

Most votes collected by any candidate were the 39,202 by Mr. Stanbury in 93,000-vote York-Scarborough. But at that he won by fewer than 2,000 over Conservative Winnett Boyd, whose 37,325 gave him the title of the loser with the greatest number of votes.

Biggest individual winner was Pierre Trudeau, with a plurality of almost 32,500 votes over the closest of his five opponents in Montreal-Mount Royal. All five lost their deposits.

Other party leaders won handily in their ridings, but with smaller margins—Robert Stanfield by 8,100 in Halifax, David Lewis by about 4,700 in York South and Real Caouette by about 8,700 in Temiscamingue.

Big loser was Maoist Lorette Glasheen, who was credited election night with just 35 votes in a total poll of more than 48,000 in Burnaby-Seymour, B.C. That was the smallest number for any candidate.

Women fared better elsewhere.

Five women in Louis-Hebert, Que., together collected almost 52,000 of 53,000 votes cast, leaving the rest to a man. Liberal Albanie Morin cornered more than 30,000 of them.

And among the Social Credit Hamlins—three brothers in Hamilton ridings, sister Priscilla in Ottawa West—Priscilla was tops in the family with 243 votes out of the Hamelin total of 678.

B.C. Labor Re-Elects Johnston

VANCOUVER (CP) — George Johnston, an official of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters' Union, has been re-elected as president of the British Columbia Federation of Labor at the federation's annual meeting.

Also re-elected were first vice-president Jock Mackenzie of the International Woodworkers of America, second vice-president Len Guy of the International Typographic Union, third vice-president Don Dunphy of the United Steelworkers of America and fourth vice-president Jim Kinnaird of the B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Counxil.

William Stewart of the Marine Workers and Boilermakers' Union, who has run for the Communist party in a number of federal elections, was elected fifth vice-president.

Stewart said he decided to run after William Dodge, executive secretary of the Canadian Labor Congress, told the convention that "he didn't mind a few Communists in the federation."

Pisa Monument Rushing to Self-Destruction

Manchester Guardian

ROME — The Leaning Tower of Pisa, already about 16½ feet out of perpendicular, has, in the past three years, shown itself to be more inclined toward self-destruction than in any previously recorded period. Professor Livio Trevisan, head of the Geology Institute at Pisa University, reports that from the beginning of 1970 the annual rate on incline has been about 5 millimeters. Since records were first kept 60 years ago, the normal rate of increasing tilt has been about 1.2 millimeters a year.

If, in the next few years, the 800-year-old bell tower should bow out of art history books and become Italy's most famous modern ruin, the weight of responsibility will lie upon Rome bureaucrats. Since the tower's own weight is 14,500 tons, an actively vindictive mind might propose that an assortment of bureaucrats, from the Ministry of Public Works and the Ministry of Education, be obliged to camp in tents beneath the tower until action is taken on some of the proposals which were published nearly a year ago for the tower's salvation.

After seven years of study, by the government produced a three-volume study of the tower last year. It has never been made available to the press or public by the Ministry of Public Works. What is known, however, is that the experts urged an international competition of bids for consolidation of the tower. (No one, of course, wants it straightened to the perpendicular.) This competition is the competence of the Ministry of Education (which is responsible for national art treasures), and the ministry has never acknowledged receipt of the study, much less called the competition.

Professor Trevisan would like to put the tower in traction. He says that in a matter of a few days it could successfully be lassoed with steel cables and tethered in the Piazza Dei Miracoli. "The advantage of this experiment is that it would not be definitive and would not damage, or compromise, any of the several other plans for stabilizing the tower, he says. "Unfortunately, there is no one in Pisa and no one in Rome with the authority to give approval to that or to any other system." The tower is sick, now gravely so, and no one in Rome is taking heed of its low pulse rate.

About 15 years ago, a group of French tourists, after a night of tasting Tuscan wine, decided that they would straighten the tower. Their plan for bringing it upright was simple: they tied chains to the tower's base and connected them to their motorcar and drove off in high glee and high gear. The tower did not budge, but their car was split in two.

That was the last salvation operation to be attempted on the monument.

Momentum of Success New Problem for Japan

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Japan, whose economy continues to grow at the fastest rate of any major industrial country, is finding that success sometimes is as hard to handle as failure.

With its gross national product expanding at more than 10 per cent a year since the mid 1950s, compared with three to six per cent for most other countries, the Japanese are achieving domestic prosperity but creating antagonisms abroad.

The expansion has been enhanced greatly by the enthusiasm with which the Japanese send their goods to the far corners of the earth, outselling and underbidding foreigners.

But that propensity for exporting has not been matched by a comparable interest in the products and investments of foreigners. It is considerably more difficult to sell to the Japanese than it is to buy from them.

The result is an enormous trade surplus and an export momentum that the Japanese seem unable to stop. And if the situation isn't corrected, the market place itself might act to force a yen revaluation.

It might occur this way: So long as the trade surpluses continue the yen remains strong and desirable. You don't have to take Japan's word for it; those surpluses testify to it. They amount to IOUs.

DEMAND BALANCE

Other countries become upset at the situation. They insist that Japan open its markets to their goods to help redress the imbalance. And they insist that Japan artificially restrict exports.

Otherwise, they say, they will insist that Japan recognize what the market is telling the world, that the yen is really worth more than its face value. They might insist that a greater value be declared for it.

A revaluation would make Japanese goods more expensive abroad and, depending upon the method in which the revaluation is carried out, tend to make foreign goods less expensive in Japan. Thus, the imbalance would tend to diminish.

Prior to this, however, the speculators will be active. Sensing a revaluation, they begin buying yen, hoping to pocket the difference. And in buying yen they put upward pressure on the price of the yen.

To stop this activity, which might disrupt their domestic economy and securities markets, the Japanese might have to bow to realities and raise the price.

Bits and pieces of the scenario already are shaping up. The Bank of Japan, says Morgan Guaranty Trust, was obliged to absorb $1.1 billion from yen buyers. This doesn't mean that a revaluation is inevitable, however. The Japanese revalued by 16 per cent last December and aren't anxious to do so twice in a year.

TURNING CHEEK, Phyllis Gaskell dares Brian Lenton to smite her, to the consternation of Margaret Martin. It's a scene from Evening Meeting of the Suicide Club, by Island author Leon Rooke, which the Gallery Players will present at Victoria Art Gallery, Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

Art Gallery 'Happening'

Etching, weaving, lute-making, wood-carving and other arts and crafts will be demonstrated in the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria's second Artists at Work "happening," which starts Nov. 30.

Thirty artists and craftsmen will demonstrate their creative talents during the four-day event.

They include Rev. Charles Brandt, who does bookbinding by hand, and lute-makers Michael Dunn and Ray Nurse of Vancouver, who will also perform on their lutes and harpsichord. Weaver Cathy Dickerson, whose work won first prize at the 1972 Canadian National Exhibition, will also be demonstrating her work.

Artists at Work opens at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 30, and will be open Dec. 1 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m. On Dec. 2 and 3 it will be open from 11 a.m. to 5

Mrs. Gandhi Wins Vote

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi easily defeated an opposition move to bring down the Indian government Tuesday over high prices. Her ministers explained them away as the result of war and a late monsoon.

In doing so, however, Finance Minister Y. B. Chavan announced that India might have to import rice, edible seeds and wheat to bridge shortages, backtracking on Mrs. Gandhi's declaration of last January that "we need not import a single grain from any country."

Knighthood for Aborigine Pastor

LONDON — The Queen knighted pastor Douglas Nicholls, the first Australian aborigine to be so honored, during an investiture at Buckingham Palace Tuesday.

Sir Douglas, 64-year-old pastor of the Church of Christ, a nonconformist congregation in a Melbourne suburb, was honored for his work for the advancement of the aboriginal people.

HALIFAX — A former Israeli fighter pilot, a Toronto consulting engineer and a freighter are to be used in an attempt to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in the Middle East.

Ken Davis, the engineer, described efforts to turn a Dutch freighter into a transmitting and receiving station to broadcast the basic truths of the position of all sides in the dispute.

Prime mover of the project is Able Nathan, 43, a former fighter pilot who sold his holdings in Tel Aviv to raise $100,000 for the project. Nathan will be a constant participant aboard the 750-ton freighter, donated by people of the Netherlands.

Davis said it is hoped the ship will be on station in waters in the Middle East area before Christmas this year. The vessel is currently being prepared in New York.

In an interview, Davis said the peace ship will monitor broadcasts from both sides on a 24-hour-a-day basis, retransmitting news reports to all people within the ship's range.

This will let everyone know what both sides are saying, he said, not just what the various partisan governments want the people to hear.

WASHINGTON — The head of the U.S. Roman Catholic hierarchy has renewed a plea that the government be generous in granting pardons to young men convicted for conscientious resistance to the draft.

John Cardinal Krol of Philadelphia, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, made his request in a speech opening the five-day annual meeting of the bishops here.

Krol said that his recommendation was prompted by the apparent "drawing to an end" of the Vietnam war and his conviction that a "need to blend charity with justice" called for the limited amnesty he proposed.

ONE OF THE FEW women to make a successful career in the theatre as a producer and director as well as treading the boards, Margaret Webster, has died at 67 in London following a long illness. She also wrote several books about the theatre and was a founding member of the British branch of Equity.

Officer Fired for 'Connection'

NEW YORK — Lieut. Meyer Rubenstein, a 33-year police veteran who allegedly made more than a dozen visits to a bugged underworld trailer in Brooklyn, has been dismissed from his $16,425-a-year job and deprived of an annual pension of $13,000.

The 58-year-old lieutenant was fired following a departmental trial on charges of having consorted with and abetted criminals and having failed to take proper police action.

Specifically, he was accused of warning the owner of the trailer — described last month by Brooklyn District Attorney Eugene Gold as a "summit headquarters" for organized crime — that three of his telephones were tapped.

Long Jail Term For Methadone 'Pusher'

WASHINGTON — Dr. Thomas Moore, who said he has treated more than 25,000 drug addicts, has been sentenced to 15 to 45 years in prison and fines totalling $150,000 dollars for illegally dispensing methadone.

In handing down sentence, U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell declared that "in my view this is not a medical case," and that he regarded Moore as "a major narcotics drug pusher who deliberately went against the law."

The judge also imposed a 12-year "special parole term" on the 39-year-old physician, sentenced him to an additional 3 months in prison for an incident in which he flew to Denmark in violation of a court order, and revoked his licence to practise medicine. He later returned and surrendered himself.

At Gesell's direction, the prisoner, who heard the sentence with no outward show of emotion, was incarcerated in an institution run by the U.S. Bureau of Prisons.

In an almost inaudible voice, Moore told the judge just prior to sentencing that he had dispensed methadone to prevent persons from committing the "dehumanizing acts" associated with heroin addiction.

"Those patients who did exactly as directed benefitted," he said.

During Moore's trial, Assistant U.S. Attorney Vincent R. Alto asserted that the Washington doctor made "well over a quarter of a million dollars" by "selling" the substance in one 22-week period last year.

Haro Inquiry Set Dec. 18

VANCOUVER (CP) — A formal inquiry into the sinking last February of the tug Haro Straits will open Dec. 18, a department of transport spokesman said Tuesday.

DOT investigators began examining the tug Tuesday and the spokesman said the technical investigation will probably be completed this week.

Alberta 'Scenery But Little Else'

CALGARY (CP) — An American film-maker who has achieved financial success with wildlife films made in southern Alberta is turning sour on the Alberta government.

Dick Robinson of Utah has been working in the Bow Valley west of Calgary for the last 15 months where he has made three films, each on a flimsy budget of about $250,000. Toklat, the story of the life of a grizzly bear, already has grossed $8 million in North America.

Robinson says he would like to set up permanent shop in Alberta, but he reported problems with government officials. "We're getting to the point where Alberta is pretty well a wipe-out for us. Alberta has nothing to offer anyone—all it has is beautiful scenery."

A lease on the filming site held by Robinson and Adanac Film Productions Ltd. expires in December and an application to lease Crown land near Seebe has been rejected. Robinson wanted a 700-acre site where he could work freely with his extensive menagerie of wild animals and erect a 60-building pioneer village for use as a set in filming in his next movie, The Legend of Grizzly Adams.

PLANS SNARLED

The village would later have been opened as a tourist attraction.

Robinson said the lands and forests department snarled his filming with red tape and overly-stringent controls on movement and use of wild animals and in selection of filming sites. He said it is much easier to make wildlife films in British Columbia.

The 106 animals used in the movies all have been raised by a staff of seven keepers. Robinson, a former logger, started with three cougars and one bear and now has a collection of more than 20 species, ranging from tiny kit foxes to giant Kodiak bears.

The American film-maker wrote, directed and supplied animals for several Wild Kingdom television shows that won Emmies. He said marketing tests indicate Brother of the Wind, a feature on an old trapper's encounter with orphaned wolf pups, has more audience appeal than Toklat.

Atmosphere of Old Africa Survives

New York Times

KANO, Nigeria — "I need money badly," Ahmadu Kano, a blanket trader in the teeming Kurmi market called out to a grimy European couple who had recently crossed the Sahara in a Land Rover.

"Otherwise," Kano continued in French, "how could I offer you this 20-pound camel's-hair blanket for five pounds?"

His home ground is a hot, pungent, noisy kaleidoscope of the familiar and the strange, of today's scientifically produced ornaments, work-savers and do-dads and of yesterday's entrenched rituals and superstitions.

Giving up on the European couple, Jano approached a better dressed American visitor who watched a trader — cooled by an electric fan — crush pieces of antimony that women in northern Nigeria use as an eye shadow.

"Five pounds, that's only about $15," the trader told the American in English. He opened the blanket with a flourish to show the red and black designs of temples. "I will take four pounds, 10 shillings from you, my friend."

The American refused the offer, moving then to a stall that featured roots, barks and herbs that Abraham Musah, an informal market guide, assured him "will cure all sicknessess — you tell what sickness, the trader tell which herbs."

Some 700 miles north of Lagos, Kano was for centuries the commercial centre of the southern reaches of the Sahara. It figured prominently in the works of Arabic and black African scholars writing about ancient African empires of Melle, Songhai and Ghana.

The large camel caravans that used to link Kano with seaports on the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, the Gulf of Guinea and the Mediterranean, are now a part of history. A railroad, a highway system and an international airport now serve this growing industrial city of some 295,000 people. Camel caravans do continue to bring potash and dates to Kano from neighboring Niger, however.

Kano, the blanket trader, was careful not to step on the potash from Niger or the shoelaces from Taiwan as he caught up to the American in a narrow market corridor.

"Four pounds and that is my last offer," he said.

His spiel was cut short by another trader calling out in Hausa, "Ga bara jehke, Ga bara jehke," or "Excuse donkey coming." The donkey was laden with the hides of cows.

Only two Fulani tribesmen, cattle raisers carrying bows, arrows and broad-headed spears and the not quite cured heads or — apparently — wild boars seemed to pay any special attention to the donkey. For a moment they stopped sipping the bottle of soda pop they shared.

The market is yet another attraction where the smell of cloves from Zanzibar combines with pungent broiling beer sausages. Here also the sounds of tinkling silver dollars of the money-changers combine with the scraping of craftsmen cleaning out large gourds of calabashes before decorating them.

Fortune Arrives Long After Artist's Departed . . . As Usual

By CY FOX

LONDON (CP) —An ebullient pioneer of modern art in Germany fled his homeland after the Nazis took power, found refuge in Norway but finally had to leave even that country after Hitler's armies began driving north into Scandinavia.

Eventually the refugee artist landed in beleaguered Britain of 1940—only to be interned in an Isle of Man camp for aliens where he was kept by British authorities for 17 months.

After that, the fortunes of Hanover-born Kurt Schwittters improved only little, although renewed tribute has just been paid to him here.

He spent some time in London during the Second World War and ultimately moved to the scenically beautiful Lake District where he subsisted—a classic case of the neglected artistic genius—until his death in 1948.

"The man was a magician," recalled one witness of the forlorn sales expeditions made by Schwitters—a high-spirited poet as well as painter and sculptor—to the London galleries in the 1940s.

The witness, now the well-known cultural commentator George Melly, watched Schwitters "produce from a cheap suitcase a number of those beautiful little monuments to urban waste" which have since proved to be the German artist's greatest claim to international renown.

"Those beautiful little monuments to urban waste"—serene patterns of rich color painstakingly constructed from old bus tickets, cigarette labels, bits of string and other leftovers from the hurly-burly of city life—currently fetch thousands of dollars on the world art market, obviously far too late for Schwitters himself to gain from their newly recognized standing as modern classics.

Schwitters left behind at least one ambitious work of sculpture as part of the legacy of his sad years in Britain.

This was a weirdly-shaped object moulded in a free-wheeling manner which was original and uniquely his own.

Now housed at the University of Newcastle in northeastern England, this "Merzbau" sculpture was conceived as a perpetually expanding assemblage of objects all cemented into form gradually, over a period of months or years.

An earlier work in the same series by Schwitters, abandoned because of his flight from the Nazis, originally took shape as a plastic sculpture, then slowly expanded into a complex of forms and planes almost large enough to fill a room.

"There were also niches and pockets . . . containing various objects," wrote British art historian Kenneth Coutts-Smith.

"There were toe-nail clippings and false teeth, a shoelace, a pen. There were letters and papers and all sorts of bizarre and inconsequential objects."

No such mammoth work was featured in the latest exhibition to be staged by a London gallery in Schwitters' honor.

Coming almost 10 years after his initial emergence as a 20th-century artist of major standing, the new show definitely confirmed his posthumously-won reputation and the high price rating attached to his works by international dealers.

"His historical position as a pioneer in modern art now is internationally secure," wrote a reviewer in The Times.

But, reflecting the vague uneasiness among some British art critics over the troubles the brilliant refugee had to endure in this ostensibly-enlightened country, Times specialist Guy Brett added:

"As one leaves (the exhibition), one cannot help remembering that only 24 years ago Schwitters died in the Lake District . . . in poverty and almost completely unrecognized by the English art world."

The Dow—Just Another Number

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — "I know of nothing in mathematics that makes a four-digit number pre-eminent over a three-digit number," Anthony Tabell said this week, as the Dow Jones industrial average was trying to climb over — and did stay over — the "mystical" 1,000 mark.

And Tabell, a well-known technical market analyst with an ancestry of well-known technical analysts, pretty well summed up Wall Street's view of the "bellwether" indicator.

As far as the public is concerned, the Dow industrials represent the stock market. As far as Wall Streeters themselves go, the Dow is little more than just another number — one indicator among a host of indicators — and not very reliable, at that.

Years ago — not too many, at that — the Dow was the premier indicator. The 30 blue chip stocks in the average represented a cross section of the industrial issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Movements in the Dow generally reflected changes in the broad market.

That began to change at almost the moment the present-day average was begun, back in the late 1920's. But it didn't become important until the 1950's, when the character of the market itself shifted.

The late 50's were the period when "growth" and "glamor" became bywords in the market. It was the time when the Polaroids and Xeroxes were developing, when IBM was leading a world-wide sweep of computers. That was when the conglomerates began to blossom, with Litton Industries in the forefront.

Even now, with the average at an all-time high, it does not even represent the action of its own component stocks. The most often cited case is U.S. Steel, which made its all-time high way back in 1959, at 108. The stock closed Friday at 32. Most of the upsurge in the Dow has been accounted for by a handful of stocks — Eastman Kodak, Sears Roebuck and some others.

Another problem with the Dow has been its volatility. When it began, the average was computed by adding the prices of its stocks and applying a "divisor" (which was around 16, to keep it in line with the older average it replaced). The divisor is adjustted whenever a component stock is split or pays a big stock dividend.

At the moment, the divisor is 1.661, which means that whenever any one stock in the average changes by a minimal ⅛ point (12½ cents), the entire average changes by just under .08 point.

That same volatility, though, is what keeps the Dow in the headlines. The NYSE index, for instance, measures the price change in each common stock, weighted for the number of shares of that stock outstanding. That produces changes in small fractions of a point, hardly the stuff of which headlines are made.

THE BIG 30

Allied Chemical Corp.; Aluminum Co. of America, American Brands, Inc.; American Can Co.; American Telephone and Telegraph Co.; Anaconda Co.; Bethlehem Steel Corp.; Chrysler Corp.; E. I. du Pont de Nenours and Co.; Eastman Kodak Co.; General Electric Co.; General Foods Corp.; General Motors Corp.; Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co.; International Harvester Co.; International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd.; International Paper Co.; Johns-Manville Corp., Owen-Illinois, Inc.; Proctor and Gamble Co.; Sears, Roebuck and Co.; Standard Oil Co., of California; Exxon Corp. (formerly Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey); Swift and Co.; Texaco Inc.; Union Carbide Corp.; United Aircraft Corp.; United States Steel Corp.; Westinghousee Electric Corp. and F. W. Woolworth Co.

Cheers Greet Street Record

"Do investors who have been waiting for this historic level now start selling off and taking profits, or does the event increase investor enthusiasm?" asked Robert Johnson of Paine, Webber, Jackson and Curtis.

"This could be the great incentive for the small investor to come back into the market," said Edward Merkle, president of the Madison Fund.

The Dow average of 30 industrial stocks closed at 1,003.16, up 6.09 from Monday's close of 997.07, the previous record. The universally-watched indicator now has set records in three sessions in a row.

OTHER HIGHS SET

The New York Stock Exchange index, a much broader gauge of market activity than the Dow, since it includes some 1,400 common stocks, also set a record Tuesday. It closed up .54 at 62.94, erasing the old high of 62.52 set Nov. 3. Standard and Poor's index of 500 stocks also hit a new high, 114.95.

Last Friday marked the first time the Dow ever has exceeded 1,000 points at any given moment during trading.

But four additional times in 1966—on Jan. 18 and 19 and Feb. 9 and 10—and again Monday, the official intra-day high of the Dow was over 1,000. The official figure is derived after the close of trading, using the individual highs of each of the 30 component stocks, even if those highs were achieved at varying times.

The fact that the 1,000 level had been approached so many times and never surmounted at a day's end had created an aura of impenetrability around it. That aura now may be evaporated.

"A lot of technicians watch the tape and buy on this kind of breakthrough," said Charles Lewis of Treves and Co. "I'm now starting to think about 1,100 and 1,200."

Lucien Hooper of W. E. Hutton and Co. was more cautious.

"A lot of people have been waiting a long time to sell when the Dow reaches 1,000," he observed.

There was a great deal of selling Monday and Tuesday, but the market's ability to withstand the selling pressure was seen as a reassuring sign, thus helping the Dow go over the top.

Brokers cited these other factors as having helped the decisive upsurge:—

1. North Vietnamese negotiators were preparing for what the public hoped would be a final round of peace talks.

2. The U.S. gross national product rose even faster in the third quarter than had previously been thought, government economists said.

3. President Nixon's landslide re-election has removed an uncertainty from the market.

Great West Purchases Tile Firm

EDMONTON (CP) — Great West Steel Industries Ltd. of Vancouver has acquired 60 per cent of the outstanding shares of International Brick and Tile Ltd. of Edmonton.

The interest, totalling about $1.2 million, will be used to enlarge the firm's brick manufacturing plant at Wabamun, Alta., and to develop facilities for the manufacture of tile.

International Brick and Tile holds patent rights on the Shafer-Cockrell process for the manufacture of brick, tile and other ceramic products from flyash.

Bowater Control Fight Moves to Classified Ads

LONDON (CP) — The future of Bowater Corp. may be decided Friday when shareholders will be asked to approve an expansion of capital as a preliminary step to a merger with Ralli International, a major international trading company.

Trafalgar House Investments Ltd., whose $300-million takeover offer was rejected by Bowater chairman J. Martin Ritchie, is seeking to block the capital-expansion approval, hoping that shareholders, given more time, might over-ride their chairman and accept the Trafalgar House bid.

Switching the struggle for Bowater from the stock market to the classified columns of the national press, Trafalgar House chairman Nigel Broackes has ordered big display advertisements appealing to shareholders to vote for an adjournment of the meeting Friday before the vote on capital expansion is taken.

Ritchie has ordered even bigger advertisements appealing to shareholders to proceed with the vote and to provide the Bowater executive with proxies from shareholders who may not turn up at the meeting.

"I think the Trafalgar House effort will be sunk without a shot being fired," Ritchie said in an interview.

He argued that if Trafalgar House had been really serious about bidding for Bowater, the world's biggest paper company, it could have proceeded with its bid months ago instead of waiting until Bowater became interested in Ralli.

He was bitter, however, about a column by Telegraph financial editor Kenneth Fleet who suggested it is imperative that shareholders support the effort to adjourn the meeting. Noting that endorsement of the capital expansion necessary for the Ralli takeover would automatically block the Trafalgar House bid, Fleet maintained that "stockholders should not be stampeded into closing their options."

London financier Jim Slater who holds 12 per cent of Bowater shares has fully supported Ritchie in his rejection of the Trafalgar House bid. But Fleet said that Ralli International is a Slater "satellite" and the interests of the majority of Bowater shareholders may not necessarily coincide with the interests of Slaters own investment operations.

"If shareholders only have the price factor in mind, they can sell their shares at the current price," he said.

Big Deficit In Balance Of Payments

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's balance of payments from July to September produced a $408-million current-account deficit on a seasonally-adjusted basis, Statistics Canada reported Tuesday.

It was the largest quarterly deficit since 1959 and "a sharp rise" from the $17-million deficit during the second quarter of this year.

On an unadjusted basis, however, the balance of payments showed a $3 million surplus.

The seasonally-adjusted figures are designed to show the longer-term trend, by removing normal seasonal variations.

The balance of payments shows the net result of inflows and outflows of money for imports, exports, purchase of services, investments, dividends and other financial transfers. It affects the international value of the Canadian dollar.

Mutual Funds to Halt Redemption Disclosures

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Mutual Funds Association, representing 85 per cent of Canada's mutual funds, announced Tuesday it will stop quarterly disclosures of the industry's sales and redemptions of fund shares.

James Budd, association president, said that after the end of this year only annual figures will be released on the value of new fund shares and shares cashed by existing shareholders.

"We feel constant repetition of redemptions can have a negative impact on the shareholders," he said in an interview.

At the same time the association reported sales in the quarter ended Sept. 30 totalled $96,845,409, up from $70,899,033 in the April-June quarter and $82,160,467 in the third quarter last year.

Redemptions in the most recent quarter were $128,508,529 compared with $168,321,937 in the second quarter and $11,676,473 in the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1971.

Total assets of the association's 68 member mutual funds rose to $2,611,292,005 from $2,594,444,320 at June 30, 1972. They were $2,481,116,667 in the third quarter last year.

There is no legal requirement for the funds association to make any disclosure of industry sales or redemptions. Member funds individually report to their own shareholders each quarter.

Mr. Budd said quarterly disclosures of sales and redemptions give a short-term picture of the industry. Mutual funds are designed to be long-term investments.

"The public is renewing its confidence in equity securities as long-term investments. Restantial increases in share asset values being achieved by mutual fund managers.

"One point often overlooked by analysts and financial writers when existing redemption figures is the growing maturity of the industry."

Hydro Talks

VANCOUVER (CP) — Negotiators from the Amalgamated Transit Union and British Columbia Hydro were to begin talks today on a new two-year contract for Hydro's 1,760 bus drivers, mechanics, maintenance men and railway workers. The current contract expires Jan. 31, 1973. In 1971 the bus drivers were on strike for more than a month in a contract dispute.

Election Analysis Explains Number Of Close Ridings

By THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC OPINION

Comparing the vote this time in the nation's largest cities, with over 100-thousand population, and that of the rural areas and small towns or villages of one to ten thousand population, reveals that the Liberal loss was at about the same level in both. In the biggest cities it was an 8-point loss; in the other, a 7-point drop.

PC's gained 5 percentage points in the big cities, and 3 points in the rural areas, villages and towns. The NDP were up 3 points in the big cities and at the same level in rural, village and small town segments.

Most steadfast in their voting patterns, were those in the lower income levels where variations are very slight. Only significant change among them was a 5-point drop for parties other than the Liberals, PCs and NDP.

Amang the middle and upper income groups, Liberals lost 9 points.

Conservatives made most gains in the middle income segments, up 6 points from 1968. They were at almost the same level among the well-to-do, and up 3 points in the lower income groups.

The NDP made most progress — 7 points — among the upper income segments, with minimal changes among the middle and lower income segments.

The study was conducted in the homes of 1,659 adults, representing the national population. In its election studies the Gallup Poll always works within a 4 percentage point margin of error, because of the many problems involved in reporting vote patterns in an election.

The question:

"If a federal election were held today, which party's candidate do you think you would favor?"

Vietnam Veteran Decorated In Ceremonies at Esquimalt

Montgomery was in Vietnam as adviser to the Vietnamese navy from June 1971 to June 1972.

The presidential citation and Bronze Star medal he received Tuesday was for "meritorious service in 120 days of combat patrol."

Those days were divided between time on the destroyer Tran Hung Dao, two river ships and two coast guard cutters.

The Tran Hung Dao (named for the navy's patron saint) is the flagship for the 80-ship Vietnamese fleet, all handed over to the Vietnamese from the American navy.

Quiet-spoken Montgomery, like most men who have lived under fire, is reticent to talk about it.

He does admit, though, that the roughest times were when he was aboard the river ships.

"We were patrolling rivers and canals in enemy-controlled territory, never knowing when you're going to be hit. This makes life interesting."

The citation also lauds Montgomery's contribution toward "psychological warfare."

Montgomery explains this is carried out through many programs, one of which is the use of tape-recorded broadcasts to the populace "explaining the government point of view."

With only a smattering of Vietnemese under his belt, Montgomery explains that he encountered no language barrier because most naval officers speak French and English as well as their own language.

What is the attitude of the Vietnamese toward the Americans?

Montgomery says, "They accept the fact that we're there to help them. They try to get everything they can."

What was the biggest impact for him?

"I learned a lot about myself and how to live with others."

There's one question he successfully fields.

It's the ne everyone would like answered.

Asked when the promised peace pact between his country and the North Vietnamese will be signed, Montgomery says he has his own personal ideas.

Saanich-Trustee Meeting Slated

Saanich aldermen named to study what is to become the municipality's first community-use school will have their first meeting with school board representatives Nov. 23.

Ald. Leslie Passmore, chairman of a three-man committee of council to discuss the proposed $2 million high school, said whatever is agreed upon would be the responsibility of next year's council to finance.

He said Tuesday he did not think it would be necessady to borrow money to pay for the Saanich share of the building, in which it is proposed to incorporate community recreation facilities.

Passmore was of the opinion the Saanich share would be comparatively nominal, suggesting for example that if the municipal contribution were $100,000 it would not be necessary to seek ratepayer approval of the scheme. ly available for the undertaking.

Support for the idea of community recreation facilities in the building — planned for 13 acres at Burnside and Acorn — has already been expressed through a detailed survey questionnaire.

Passmore observed that support for a library was voiced prior to the opening of Centennial branch library behind Town and Country shopping centre. He reasoned that support now may lean more heavily toward a pool.

The chairman said he did not favor an outdoor pool as had been suggested, but he could be inclined to support a pool in the basement of the school, which due to the slope of the site would be at grade level on one side.

Bengali Recognition 'Remote'

By LEWIS M. SIMONS
Washington Post

RAWALPINDI — Despite "secret" meetings between representatives of Pakistan and Bangladesh, Pakistani recognition of its former eastern wing is as remote as it has ever been, President Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto said in an interview.

Bhutto also revealed that China, when it vetoed the admission of Bangadesh into the United Nations, did so at the request of Pakistan. Until now, Pakistani officials have insisted that China was acting of its own accord.

In the interview with The Washington Post, Bhutto said the meetings, which have taken place in New York, have "drawn a blank."

"Each time their representatives have met with our United Nations people we have made positive gestures, a multitude of overtures, he said. "Unfortunately, they have not responded. And they have insisted on complete secrecy.

"We have offered food, rice, contacts, telling them that we are prepared to send back Bengalis, treating the Bengalis well here, sending emissaries.

Bangladesh Insists on Secrecy

"But to all our good gestures, our decent gestures, they have insisted that there must be complete secrecy and that we must maintain that secrecy. But I feel I must now say something. Otherwise a one-sided story gets out.

He placed the blame for lack of progress on Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Mujibur who, he said, demanded recognition "as a face-saving device" before consenting to a meeting with Bhutto.

But Bhutto also said that while he was confident of the support of his own Pakistan Peoples Party as well as opposition parties, he would not recognize the breakaway state "without the support of all my people."

This indicates that Bhutto intends to let the issue drag on until Mujib relents on his insistence that recognition must precede a meeting. Bhutto is just as adamant that the procedure take place in reverse order.

He was prepared to recognize Bangladesh last August, when Pakistan's national assembly met, if Mujib would have consented to a meeting "as he had promised," Bhutto said. Such a meeting is necessary, he said, "if we are to recognize Bangladesh in real terms, not in the abstract."

Referring to the election victory of Mujib and his Awami League — which led directly to the Bangladesh war of secession — Bhutto said he would "offer the crown to him, tell him he has the right to be president or prime minister of a reunited Pakistan."

Sarcastically referring to Mujib as "the Banglabandhu," a name meaning "father of Bengal," Bhutto said:

"If sometime or another he puts his feet on the ground and stops imposing this unnecessary condition and we meet, I can tell you with complete confidence that I can carry my people.

Denying claims by political critics that he dare not recognize Bangladesh — which he is known to want to do — because of splits within the PPP and opposition from other parties, Bhutto said:

"There are no split in my party. I am the PPP. There is no opposition. It has all been defeated."

In discussing the closely related issue of an accommodation with India under the Simla Pact which he and Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi signed last July, Bhutto indicated that he considered the outlook dim and that Pakistan counted on China for support.

India and its principal ally, the Soviet Union, continue to pose a threat to Pakistan, he said, and this threat stands in the way of his plans for development of the impoverished country

Big Dreams; Big Problems

"This is our biggest problem, I admit it. We have big dreams for development," Bhutto said. "But we cannot reconcile our defence needs and our development needs until we resolve our dispute with India. It defied solutions."

Asked to assess his administration, now nearly one year old, Bhutto said his greatest failures have been domestic:

"I had hoped to get the economy kicking sooner and that has not happened. I had hoped for a greater appreciation from labor for our reform movements and that has not come either."

Internationally, he said, his top disappointment was that Pakistan continued to have "a bad image." Following the dismemberment of the country, he said, "I had expected that the world would give us some understanding. But they keep screwing us to the wall."

Dad Ordered Boy Starved To Death

MIAMI (AP) — A three-year-old boy whose mother told police he lived on chocolate milk for three months after her husband ordered her not to feed him died of starvation. The boy's father was charged with manslaughter.

Variety Children's Hospital authorities said little Dean Nozza was dead when his father, Michael Nozza, brought him to hospital Monday night.

She said her son had not eaten solid food for three months, that his only sustenance had been chocolate milk.

"She said her husband wouldn't allow her to take the boy to the hospital, and said she was afraid he would beat her and the other children if she did," Sheriff's Lieut. John Esty said.

AFRAID OF ARREST

Police said Nozza, a sandblaster, "didn't allow the child to be taken to a hospital because he was afraid he would be arrested for child abuse."

Nozza told the hospital staff that Dean "would not drink anything except chocolate milk" and had not eaten for several weeks, Dr. Robert Lawson, Variety's chief of staff, said Tuesday.

Lawson said Dean "was brought in here dead with evidence of extreme malnutrition." However, he said the admitting physician saw no signs of bruises or fractures on the child.

Police records show the Nozzas were investigated in 1969 after authorities received a complaint of child malnutrition. That incident involved another child, police said.

Dade County authorities took the remaining Nozza children, ranging in age from one to seven, into custody Monday night after Lawson advised the agency of Dean's death. A custody hearing for them is scheduled today.

Dial a Doctor

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Officials of Creighton University and St. Joseph Hospital are pleased with Dr. Dial, a recorded telephone health message that has received more than 353,000 calls in its first nine months of operation. But they were jolted by one inquiry. A woman caller wanted to know if he made house calls.

AL BAILEY SAYS:
Allow those hot left-over meats to cool before placing them in your refrigerator. WHY? BECAUSE, although fast cooling will have no adverse affect on the meat itself, the heat from it will cause other foods to sweat—thus producing excessive moisture within the refrigerator which in turn will encourage the bacterial actions involved in the development of off-flavors and even spoilage of other foods contained therein.

When Are Spots on Skin Dangerous?

Some people write me to ask why they have gotten a number of brown or reddish spots or perhaps a little nodule or a little roughened place on the skin. It takes an expert skin specialist to recognize which spots are harmless and which may be cancerous or pre-cancerous (meaning that the spot might eventually become cancerous. Cancerous or pre-cancerous spots should quickly be burned off with electric sparks or with acid.

Often the person, when he or she gets to be past 60, will get some "liver spots," which are areas of brown pigment, perhaps on the cheeks. They come because of an accumulation of a brown pigment called melanin. I have never heard of their "turning into" anything more serious, and I don't know of any way to make them disappear.

Probably the best method, if a women is distressed about the spots, is to cover them with make-up. One preparation that can work well is "Covermark," made by Lydia O'Leary, in New York City.

When I was in my 50s, I had several slightly ulcerated spots appear on my face. I was pretty sure they were forerunners of cancers which assailed me, probably because in my youth I did much X-ray work without adequate protection from the rays, before we had learned the dangers of overexposure to X-rays. As a result, I hurried to a skin specialist and had the spots burned off with a little bit of acid.

Some of my skin cancers may have come also because I grew up in Hawaii, where I spent many hours on the beaches in the hot sun. Farmers and lifeguards, who spend much time in the sun, should be especially on the lookout for a rough nodule or spot that ulcerates a bit, then perhaps heals and then ulcerates again. That is dangerous.

It is well to go occasionally, perhaps once a year, to a skin specialist and have him look at the spots to see if he thinks any of them are dangerous or likely to become cancerous.

WHAT HAPPENED TO QUINSY?

When I was a boy, quinsy was a popular term for badly inflamed and swollen tonsils. The doctors used the term especially for a little abscess on a tonsil. They spoke also of a "quinsy sore throat."

When I was a boy, I had many attacks of quinsy, or tonsillitis, and eventually, when I got to college, a splendid nose and throat expert removed my big tonsils. That operation saved me from much discomfort.

Wills May Take Japanese Offer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maury Wills, a baseball free agent after 14 years as a major league shortstop, said Tuesday he is considering an offer to play baseball in Japan next season, but would prefer to join a United States major-league club as a player-coach.

Wills confirmed that he has been negotiating with Nankai Hawks of Japan, but denied he had reached any agreement.

Wills, 40, who set a major-league record in 1962 by stealing 104 bases, was put on waivers by Los Angeles Dodgers several weeks ago after spending most of the 1972 season on the bench. No other team picked him up, presumably because of the requirement that they match 80 per cent of his $100,000 Dodger contract for 1972.

Wills said he is interested in coaching a major-league team, but no offers have been made.

Wills said Nankai Hawks talked to him about coaching, but he told them he wants to play and may consider serving as a player-coach.

REPLACING John Tribe as municipal administrator of Saanich early in 1973 will be W. M. Tremayne, 48, at present city manager of Dollard des Ormeaux, a Montreal suburb. The civil engineer was chosen from among 92 applicants for the job, from which Tribe retires Jan. 31.

TICAT SLOTBACK BEST OF ROOKIES

HAMILTON (CP) — Bob Richardson, Hamilton Tiger-Cat slotback, today was named Canadian Rookie of the Year in the Eastern Football Conference.

The announcement, by EFC secretary Frank Gibson, also disclosed that Ticat veteran Garney Henley is the 1972 recipient of the Jeff Russel Memorial Trophy.

The two players will be in action Saturday at Ottawa where the Ticats meet the Rough Riders in the first of a two-game, total-point final starting at 11 a.m. PST.

The sudden-death Western final at Winnipeg, between the Blue Bombers and Saskatchewan Roughriders, is set for noon PST.

The eastern game will be carried nationally on the CTV network while CBC-TV will handle the western game nationally.

INJURY OPENS WAY

Richardson, a 6-foot,-5, 250-pounder, was employed at tackle and centre during Hamilton's training camp but became a regular slotback for the final nine games with Gord Christian's injury.

The Hamilton native, who earned his football letter at Iowa State University, was frequently flanked wide in Hamilton's game plans and caught 15 passes for 251 yards and one touchdown.

Richardson became the first Ticat to win rookie honors since Tommy Grant in 1956.

Under a revision of the awards program in the EFC, Henley won the trophy this year as the conference representative in the national individual awards which will be announced prior to the Grey Cup game here Dec. 3.

The two-way veteran of 13 seasons with Hamilton previously won the honor in 1963 as a sportsmanship achievement.

Scorpion Cagers Plan Busy Month

Victoria Scorpions, the city's new senior "A" basketball team, have lined up six exhibition games in the next month and will stage a pre-Christmas tournament the weekend of Dec. 17.

Scorpions, not entered in a league, meet a city senior "B" all-star team this Sunday at Central Junior High at 1 p.m. The team plays Seattle Ruth Realty in Seattle Nov. 25, Vancouver North Shore at Vancouver City College Dec. 2, Vancouver again Dec. 3 at Oakridge Community Centre in Vancouver, North Island All-Stars Dec. 9 at Central Junior High at 8:30 p.m. and the same team Dec. 10 at Central at 1 p.m.

The Dec. 17 tournament will involve Scorpions, Ruth Realty, Simon Fraser Alumni and a fourth team still to be named.

Britain Collects Title Despite Tie

LYON, France (Reuter) — Britain took the World Rugby League Cup from Australia here Saturday after the two teams had finished level 10-10 and the end of extra time in the final.

Britain, which had a better record in the qualifying matches, including a win over Australia, took the cup on a better points average.

Dartmouth Ace Leads Collegians

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Richard Monroe, a fourth-year physical education student at Dartmouth University in Halifax, won the Canadian Inter-collegiate Athletic Union cross-country race.

Monroe completed the five-mile course in 25 minutes, 42.2 seconds, just 7.8 seconds ahead of secone-place finisher, Larry Switzer of the University of Manitoba.

Phils Sign Pagan

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia Phillies signed Jose Pagan, former Pittsburgh Pirates infielder, Monday. Pagan, 37, a 14-year veteran of the major leagues, was released by the Pirates last month.

Dolphins' QB May Be Back

MIAMI (AP) — Coach Don Shula of Miami Dolphins says he hopes to regain the services of first-string quarterback Bob Griese for the final regular-season National Football League game against Baltimore Colts Dec. 16 in the Orange Bowl.

Griese is to have the cast removed from his broken leg in the next two weeks, then will begin a rehabilitation program.

Lamb Price Record Set In Kamloops

The Suffolk-Hampshire cross, sold by Pat Reid and son of Salmon Arm, will go to Avel's 13-year-old daughter Irene who will try to raise a 4-H champion from the 112-pound ewe lamb.

The price of $5.10 a pound for the lamb was more than double the $2.50 a pound in 1967.

Volunteer Shortage At Hospital

G. R. Pearkes Clinic for Handicapped Children at 3970 Haro Rd., is suffering from a serious shortage of volunteer workers.

The opening in September of the new $175,000 wing on the clinic has increased the number of children the clinic can handle. This means more volunteers are needed to help with the children, volunteer spokesman Dianne Pearce said today.

Also, many women who signed as volunteers in September have been unable to continue, she said.

As the clinic has a permanent staff of only 22 or 23, it relies on several hundred volunteers to do much of the work, said Mrs. Pearce.

Anyone who likes working with children and can spare half an hour a week to work at the clinic can call Mrs. Pearce at the clinic, 477-1851, or at home, 386-3808.

PAPERS TOLD TO REDU

POLLEN'S ADS TO SEEK REPLY

Mayor Peter Pollen is preparing an advertisement for insertion in both Victoria daily newspapers asking Stuart Underhill, vice-president of Victoria Press, to reply to a letter Pollen wrote to him about two months ago on the cablevision issue.

In that letter Pollen charged that there was a conflict of interest involved in Underhill"s position as a director of Premier Cablevision, parent company of Victoria Cablevision, and in the stock holdings which Victoria Press has in Premier.

These factors, Pollen's letter said, were partly responsible for the fact that neither paper had opposed the Victoria Cablevision firm's recent application for a rate increase.

RCMP Corporal Convicted

An RCMP corporal convicted of mischief by causing a bomb scare on a Pacific Western Airlines flight has been "disciplined" by the force and transferred from his detachment in Kelowna.

Assistant RCMP Commissioner Gordon Cunningham said in Victoria Wednesday that Cpl. James D. Clavelle, 33, will be transferred to southern Alberta.

Clavelle, a member of the force for 15 years, pleaded not guilty to causing the bomb scare aboard a PWA plane awaiting takeoff from Vancouver last June. He was convicted Sept. 21 after a trial and fined $100.

He testified that he had had too much to drink and had been joking when he made remarks to stewardesses about passengers having bombs on the aircraft.

The flight, destined for Kelowna, was delayed 40 minutes while police escorted Clavelle from the plane and placed him under arrest. He was not on duty at the time.

Cunningham said it is not "customary" for RCMP to make disciplinary actions within the force public knowledge but the circumstances of the case were "very carefully" studied and Clavelle's suspension from the force would have been inappropriate.

"Our disciplinary procedures are uniform across the force," he added.

Spy's Wife Jailed 2½ Years

WINCHESTER, England (Reuter) — The wife of a British naval torpedo expert jailed for spying for the Soviet Union was sentenced to 30 months' imprisonment today for leading her husband intoh for leading her husband into his espionage activities.

Maureen Bingham, 35-year-old mother of four, was found guilty last month of breaking the Official Secrets Act by making contact with the Soviet embassy in London to suggest selling confidential information.

Her husband, Sub.-Lt. David Bingham, was sentenced to 21 years' imprisonment last March after a court was told he had betrayed information about secret underwater weapons that was "almost beyond price."

After her husband's conviction, Mrs. Bingham admitted to reporters that she had led her husband into spying.

She said her husband had been opposed to spying but she had persuaded him that they could obtain money from the Russians to pay off household debts.

NDP Drafts Terms for Liberals

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA —A list of eight or nine demands will be laid before Prime Minister Trudeau and his minority Liberal government, by the New Democratic Party, as the price for its support in Parliament, Stanley Knowles, NDP House leader said here today.

There will be considerable negotiations behind the scenes, he said, to ascertain just how many of the NDP "demands" or "objectives" the Trudeau government will be prepared to accept.

Knowles conceded that the NDP would be prepared to negotiate on its list of demands and would not necessarily insist that the entire list had to be accepted by the Liberal minority government.

The list includes one demand for a substantial increase in the old age pension and a requirement that the pension be made available at age 60 for those who leave the labor market.

The NDP will also insist on strong measures being taken to ease the unemployment problem.

TAX REFORMS

Tax reform moves will be included in the list.

The NDP held a meeting of its federal council and a caucus meeting in Toronto over the Remembrance Day weekend.

At the caucus an attempt was made to hammer out the list of demands or objectives that the NDP will set out.

Preparing the list in detail proved more difficult than originally expected.

The work was carried on in Ottawa Tuesday.

NDP Leader David Lewis may make the list of "objectives" or "demands" public at a press conference later this week.

Lewis is on record as determined, as NDP leader, to do his best to make Parliament function despite it being a House of minorities.

However that will depend on whether the minority government is prepared to meet the objectives or demands the NDP will place before Trudeau.

Knowles said Tuesday on his return from Toronto that it was apparent that the western NDP members were particularly aware of the "very strong anti-Trudeau feeling among the voters."

While he did not say so, it is apparent that the NDP members from the west will be getting strong reactions from their supporters in Western Canada if the party continues to maintain a Trudeau government in office.

Knowles said if the Trudeau government is defeated on a confidence vote with the help of the NDP in the Commons, the NDP would then lay its list of demands before Progressive Conservative leader Robert Stanfield.

Whether the Conservatives wold have the NDP support in the House to form a minority government would depend on Stanfield's reaction to the list.

STANFIELD'S OPTION

If he rejected most of the objectives or demands the NDP might withdraw its support and a general election would be precipitated.

Knowles conceded that there were a lot of "permutations and combinations." He said the NDP would have to "play it by ear."

The NDP House leader said it is not clear what position Trudeau will take if he wins a confidence motion on the throne speech and is defeated two or three weeks later in the House.

Would he go to Governor-General Roland Michener and seek dissolution, or would he recommend that the governor-general call on Stanfield to try to form a government?

That is the problem confronting the NDP as it considers its strategy for the upcoming session of Parliament.

The NDP is convinced the Canadian people do not want another election immediately and accordingly will try to do its best to make this new Parliament function, said Knowles.

16 Cancer Fighters Honored

WASHINGTON (WP) — Sixteen medical scientists who pioneered in the use of drugs to successfully treat formerly fatal cancers have won the 1972 Albert Lasker medical research awards.

In honoring doctors for the treatment of patients the Albert and Mary Lassker Foundation departed from its usual policy of giving at least one award to a scientist for basic research into disease.

Many of those scientists later won Nobel prizes.

But Mary Lasker, president of the foundation, said this year's 16 winners were picked to emphasize the new successes in the treatment of certain forms of cancer.

The most exciting advances in the treatment of cancer have been in the use of combinations of powerful drugs. Cancer experts now speak of cures in such previously fatal cancers as Hodgkin's disease and leukemia as well as other, less frequent cancers.

Many doctors, however, are still not aware of the new forms of treatment.

Dr. A. Hamblin Letton, president of the American Cancer Society, reported that many more cancer patients could be saved through the use of the best forms of therapy and early detection.

A special award was given to Dr. C. Gordon Zubrod, who heads the drug treatment program at the National Cancer Institute. He was cited for administrative leadership in setting up experiments to find the best drugs to fight cancer and the best ways to use them.

Turtles Spell Trouble—MOH

"These are dangerous pets as almost 100 per cent of them are contaminated with salmonella and can be carriers of this disease," Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread told a metro health board meeting Tuesday.

There are about 200 forms of salmonella infection, he explained later. They can be responsible for outbreaks of food-poisoning, sometimes severe and even fatal.

Whitbread told the board sale of pet turtles should be stopped because they constitute a health hazard.

"Most of these turtles are shipped from Meixco and the southern states where they are bred in contaminated waters."

Not so, says Bob Montgomery, representative for Hartz Mountain Pet Supplies Ltd., who delivers about 200 turtles a week to Victoria stores.

He has never had a complaint in the year and a half he has been handling the local turtle market. Furthermore, his company quarantines livestock before moving it to retailers to make certain it's clear of infection.

Montgomery said he understands if aquariums are kept clean there are no problems and the stores he deals with keep their aquariums clean.

Whitbread said Tuesday he believes the provincial and federal governments are consulting on restrictions. The board decided to ask the city solicitor if it is practical to propose business permits be withheld from stores selling turtles.

Labor Strikes Sweep France

PARIS (UPI) — A wave of industrial unrest swept France Wednesday. It brought traffic chaos to Paris, closed one of the capital's leading theatres, threatened hospital services and jeopardized the nation's television programs.

Among thousands of workers striking or threatening unrelated stoppages to seek better pay and conditions were railwaymen, postal workers, civil servants, customs officers, journalists, television staff, electricians, stage hands, miners, bank clerks, hospital employees and steel workers.

Trade unions launched the strikes to overcome the government's and business community's 'opposition to sharp salary increases.' The unions began the movement after the government announced the cost of living in September rose 6.2 per cent above the September, 1971, level.

Worst hit were commuters from outlying areas in the southwest whose train services were sharply cut by a strike of railwaymen. An official said: "Only about one train in five will run from this region."

As travellers took to their cars in droves, jams snarled traffic on roads leading into Paris and an hour-long journey took twice as long at the rush-hour period.

$500,000 Rebuild

The Churchill Hotel will soon be able to offer a wee dram to American tourists visiting nearby Bastion Square.

Hotel manager Jim Riddoch says part of a planned $500,000 rebuilding of the insides of the 25-year-old hotel will be a brand new cocktail bar licensed to serve "short" drinks.

"If you could see how many American tourists come in here in the summer looking for a whisky it'd make you cry," Riddoch said today.

The Churchill at present has only a beer parlor in its basement and rooms without dining service or adequate bathrooms.

Renovations to the 1140 Government building, which was formerly offices, will not make any marked change in its outward appearance, Riddoch said.

He said the building's upper area would be closed for about four months "hopefully right away," but the basement beer parlor would remain open.

Riddoch said the renovations had been desired by the hotel owners for 10 years, but financing had only recently become available. He said the Liquor Control Board approved renovation plans last spring.

MARTIAN LIFE REMAINS POSSIBILITY

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Mariner 9 dropped into orbit around Mars one year ago Sunday becoming the first man-made object to circle another planet.

Mariner ended its $125-million mission Oct. 27. It is still orbiting the planet but no longer transmits scientific data and is expected to crash on Mars in about 50 years.

The space probe gathered evidence that once Mars may have supported life on the microbe level, Dr. Thomas Vrebalovich, assistant project scientist at California Institute of Technology's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, said in an interview.

"The mission also raised a slim possibility of life there now," he added.

Winter Showing OF 'Plum' Blossoms

The only tree likely to be seen flowering now in parks, on boulevards or in private gardens is Prunus subhirtella autumnalis, the autumn-flowering plum, or cherry.

In April this tree would be scarcely noticed for the blossoms are not showy, but now and in mild periods during winter they delight us by their nonconformity.

At the weekend I caught a glimpse of one of these trees in Beacon Hill Park. In past years the normal pattern followed is that of a few blossoms opening in late November after the leaves fall.

This year it was strange to find the red tinted leaves still on the tree, and the portion exposed to warm sun during the week covered with dainty pale pink blossom.

Some people call these cherry blossoms, others plum blossoms. It really doesn't matter which you consider them to be, for the word Prunus is the botanical name of both fruits. You will need the complete name when you buy to avoid disappointment.

★ ★ ★

Prunus subhirtella autumnalis is considered as a tree suitable for a small garden, since its ultimate height reaches between 20 and 25 feet. The branching habit is twiggy, and the small flowers nearly an inch across are borne in clusters all along the branches.

The buds are quite pink through they open to a paler shade. A slightly deeper shade of pink is found in the variety named "rosea."

As your tree grows, so will the number of blossoms to be open at one time. When you think of a first sprinkling in November mild days, followed by intermittent small bursts of bloom throughout winter and a final showing in late March, you realize this is good interest value for your garden dollars.

The dainty little flowrs need a dark background from your chief viewing point, and not too far away at that.

Perhaps a spot near the patio against a dark green conifer, your own or your neighbor's will be your choice. You will see it from the house; you will enjoy a cup of coffee beneath it on a mild winter's day; and when it grows up to eight or 10 feet, your Autumn-flowering plum (or cherry) will begin to cast a light pattern of shade over a corner of the patio in summer.

SOLUTION THURSDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

It was the late George S. Kaufman, world-renowned playwright, who once said that whenever he went to his bridge club to play a few rubbers, he always asked to sit in the South seat. The reason, of course, was that, in bridge literature, South always hold the good cards and purchases the contract.

When today's deal arose in a rubber-bridge game some years ago, Mr. Kaufman found himself in the South seat looking at the gorgeous hand that bridge authorities have decreed to be South's rightful heritage. He demonstrated that he knew how to handle it, although only an insignificant overtrick was at stake. Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

3♣	Pass	3◇	Pass
3♡	Pass	4♣	Pass
6♣	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

Upon winning the opening spade lead, Mr. Kaufman perceived that he had a guaranteed contract, with an overtrick apparently depending on a successful heart finesse. When play had ended, he had made the overtrick, but without resorting to the finesse, and without taking any risk in his play.

At trick two, he led the nine of trumps to dummy's ten, after which he ruffed the deuce of diamonds with his jack of trumps. Then came the six of trumps to the board's eight-spot, and a second diamond lead was ruffed with the queen of trumps.

Now the carefully-preserved deuce of trumps was led to the board's three-spot. On the ace and king of diamonds Mr. Kaufman discarded his ten and jack of hearts. With both opponents following suit to all four diamond leads, the board's fifth diamond had just become the sole surviving diamond in the deck; and on it South tossed away his queen of hearts.

Had Mr. Kaufman cashed one of his top trumps at trick two (the ace, king, queen, or jack), he would have made only twelve tricks since he would, in this case, have deprived dummy of a vitally-needed entry.

It should be mentioned, perhaps naively, that if the eight adversely-held diamonds had not been divided 4-4, then South would have taken the heart finesse, as a last resort. But, on this day, the finesse was unnecessary.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Your Dad, eh?" said Mike, looking at the photo. "How old is he now?"

"It's odd you ask," replied Doug. "I was thinking about it today. His age is the last two figures of the year he was born, and it's also what you get if you take his birth year from the present year 1972. And the funny thing is that the same applies to my age."

What were the ages?

Thanks for an idea to L. P. Mullooly, Longford, Eire.

ART THEFT RANSOM BID AWAITED

BAGNOLS - SUR - CEZE, France (UPI) — Police said Tuesday they expect the thieves who stole 15 paintings worth an estimated $1 million from the local museum Sunday to try to negotiate a ransom in exchange for their return.

The paintings, including works by Matisse, Cezanne and Renoir, were missed Monday when a guard discovered the theft. Museum officials estimated the total value of the missing works at $1 million.

Police said important information has been obtained concerning the thieves' whereabouts, but they refused to reveal what this information was.

Ottawa to Consider High Cost of Property

By BOB DOUGLAS

OTTAWA (CP) — The high cost of land for housing is drawing increasing government attention.

It is likely to get a thorough airing at a January federal-provincial conference and may appear in federal-provincial-municipal talks in Toronto next week.

The federal government has moved to ease land assembly provisions by reducing the cost of land and is talking about dealing with the major stumbling-block to land assembly— servicing.

The cost of land generally is agreed to be one of the two main factors in soaring housing prices. The other element is mortgages.

There have been provisions for municipal land assembly in the National Housing Act since 1949. But few municipalities have taken advantage of it.

MONEY PROBLEM

Peter Burns, secretary of the housing committee of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, said in a recent interview: "If you only have so much money you put it where you have to put it—police and fire services and schools."

He said the cost of buying land combined with servicing it has stopped many municipalities from using NHA land assembly provisions.

Saskatoon has long been heralded as a model of what can be done through public land assembly, acquiring much land during the depression of the 1930s through tax default and buying more during the 1950s. The goal was to use the publicly-owned land as a planning tool.

The city was able to use its ownership of land to ensure that private developers followed municipal plans. The land gave the municipality bargaining power when developers sought to buy property from the city.

The city bought 1,000 acres under NHA provisions with the federal government providing 75 per cent of the funds, the province 20 per cent and Saskatoon five per cent.

HOLD COST DOWN

One observer said the average price of a serviced residential lot in Saskatoon in 1970 was between $3,000 and $4,000 while in Vancouver it was about $7,000 and in Edmonton $8,500.

Mr. Burns said the advantage of public land assembly is that the municipality or province can buy land years in advance of development at a reasonable price.

Private developers cannot afford to buy large tracts of land and wait for years to develop it. They buy property only when it is obvious a development is imminent and the price soars.

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. provides funds for some services to land developments. But such things as trunk sewers and water mains not directly at the location of the development, do not qualify for aid.

This means that municipalities must bear the financial responsibility for supplying these services.

But Urban Affairs Minister Ron Basford promised in September that the federal government would take steps to deal with municipal sewage disposal problems by late 1973 or early 1974.

COST COULD FALL

If more money for sewage is made available through CMHC, the cost of municipalities of servicing land may be more reasonable.

Amendments to the National Housing Act, introduced in the last session of Parliament, expanded opportunities for land assembly by requiring repayment of loans within 25 years rather than 15.

Also under discussion is whether public land should be sold or leased for housing.

Toronto lawyer Michael Dennis, whose report to the CMHC was made public by New Democratic Leader David Lewis this summer, strongly favored leasing.

He argued that leasing leaves control of land prices in the hands of the municipality. Those renting the property may build and later sell the buildings but not the land.

This has not been the general practice in Canada but it may gain more favorable attention as various governments attempt to deal with the rapidly rising cost of housing.

Industry, Ecologists Squaring Off

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. (CP) — Ontario's forest industry intends to take the offensive against certain vociferous ecological groups who want to "lock up" the province's forests, a director of the Ontario Forest Industries Association said today.

"We are tired of having darts thrown at us," William R. Parks of Thunder Bay, Ont., told a meeting of the Rotary Club.

"Industry will do its best to kill the myths that we are resource rapers, polluters and fibre fiends."

Mr. Parks, president of Northern Tar, Chemical and Wood Ltd., said the forest industry is opposed to "unfounded and emotional outcries" by preservationists and other pressure groups who "advocate the mothballing of extensive areas of our forests."

"While unused and unmanaged forests may be left intact for our grandchildren, one fact does emerge loud and clear—we will have lost forever large volumes of raw material which could have been harvested from these forests."

FORESTS RENEWABLE

Modern forest management policies, Mr. Park said, can preserve forest lands for the benefit of future generations. "The forest, unlike the coal mine and the oil well, is a renewable resource which will be with us ad infinitum."

Mr. Parks said the industry is not opposed to preservationists who want wilderness areas "where nature lovers are free to do their thing."

"We do need recreation sites for camping, picnicking and other pursuits. The matter to be pursued, however, is not whether such areas are needed but rather how much of it is needed."

The industry seeks a "multiple use" plan whereby all bona fide users of the forests can be accommodated.

"The logging lunatic," Mr. Parks added, "who says the forest is mine and mine alone is just as kooky in my book as the wilderness weirdo who has somehow conjured up a mythical image of a forest primeval."

PEKING — China's drive for international goodwill will move into the world of popular entertainment later this month when a troupe of acrobats from the north China city of Shenyang begins a two month tour of Canada, the United States and Mexico.

The acrobats — a term used by the Chinese to cover conjurers, jugglers and trick cyclists as well as daredevil gymnasts — will perform for ticket-buying audiences in more than a dozen cities in the three countries.

The tour, originally expected to take place next year, has been brought forward to land the acrobats in the U.S. at the height of the Christmas season—usually a sellout time for performances with a strong appeal to children.

The acrobats, masters of skills that are as old as Chinese civilization itself, will be seeking to build on the base of goodwill established by groups of table tennis players, scientists and doctors who have preceded them to North America this year.

They will go first to Canada, where they will perform in four eastern cities over a three-week period—Ottawa, Nov. 22 to 25; Montreal, Nov. 29 to Dec. 2; Quebec City, Dec. 7 to Dec. 9; and Toronto, Dec. 12 and 13.

Plans for the troupe to travel to Western Canada had to be scrubbed when the Chinese moved the dates for the tour forward, apparently to benefit from the boom in popular entertainment that accompanies the Christmas season in North America.

Originally, Chinese officials here were talking of dates sometime in the New Year, but preliminary discussions with organizers in the three countries apparently persuaded them that the troupe would make a greater impact—especially in the U.S.—at the height of the holiday season.

It is understood that the 71 performers in the troupe will be paid according to the established schedule for entertainers in their field, at least in Canada and the U.S., with the theatre owners taking an agreed share of the proceeds.

The troupe, the largest group the Peoples Republic has ever sent on tour in North America, was selected for the tour from among dozens of top-grade professional troupes in China.

If the opinions of foreigners who have seen the Manchurian troupe perform are any guide, it should be a smash hit in North America.

Denmark Foreign To Greenlanders

By GEORGE BOULTWOOD

GODTHAAB, Greenland (AP) — The young Greenlander chosen for vocational training in Denmark nervously asked: "Will I have to carry a gun?"

He was convinced that the streets of Copenhagen were overrun by cowboys.

Ib Olsen, inspector of the Greenland vocational training service, tells this story to illustrate the collision of cultures as the Danes try to teach Greenlanders skills that will give them new ways of earning a living.

LAUDS DANES

The integration of the former colony with the life-style of Danes living 2,500 miles across the Atlantic is producing inevitable human strains.

The young Greenlander had been brought from a bleak settlement in the far north to this provincial capital for training in the construction trade. He had seen a few movies and some television—just enough to mislead him completely about Denmark.

Greenlandic leaders do not dispute Denmark's generosity or motives in spending $100 million a year to create a modern society for the 45,000 inhabitants of the world's largest island.

But they say the pace is too fast for the Greenlanders to take without damage to human qualities.

Karl Elias Olsen, 32, deputy head of an adult education centre at Holsteinborg, said: "The Danes deserve a pat on the back for what they have done for us—but money is not everything."

He is fluent in three languages—his native Greenlandic, Danish and English. He is a passionate defender of the Eskimo culture.

His institute runs courses to preserve the ancient skills of kayak building, spear-making and carving bizarre figures in whalebone or soapstone. Greenlandic artists are encouraged to use new media to reflect Eskimo traditions.

Karl Olsen abhors the suggestion that some 6,000 Greenlanders will have to emigrate to Denmark by 1985 to find work.

"If such a transfer takes place, we will know that many souls have been killed," he said.

"There are too many trees in Denmark, so we can't see. . . . We have grown up in a country of wide horizons."

Greenland has no trees except for a few in the south. The pace of conversion is destroying human values, he claims. He made his point by demonstrating the laugh of the new townsman—a weak snigger. But the real Greenland laugh, as he performed it, was a roaring belly-laugh.

Olsen looks north, to other Eskimo societies, rather than to Denmark, for cultural inspiration. Two Canadian Eskimos had attended seminars at the institute. He hoped that more from Canada and Alaska would come next year and added that he would like contact with Eskimos in Siberia.

SEES DETIORATION

Moses Olsen, 34, a Greeland member of the Danish parliament, acknowledges the man material benefits the Greenlanders have receeived, but he complains the education system is designed for a Danish existence.

"We young Greenlanders find that the creation of a modern social pattern has not been accompanied by human growth, mental stability, psychological balance—in short, human well-being in the new environment," Moses Olsen wrote recently.

European, American MDs Answer Call From Nfld.

By JAMES H. HUSSEY
CP Correspondent

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — During the last few years Newfoundland's department of health has brought in doctors from many countries. Annual advertising campaigns have been launched in Europe and this year the campaigns was extented to the United States.

The department hopes to attract doctors to the island's cottage hospitals, some in isolated outports.

Dr. A. T. Rowe, health minister, said: "Response to this year's advertising campaign is good.

The minister and members of his department plan to travel to Europe and the U.S. to interview applicants.

About 25 per cent, or about 120 of the province's 466 practising doctors, are government-employed and 55, or almost half, have been brought in from outside Canada.

Newfoundland has the lowest ratio of doctors to population in Canada. Earlier this year the Newfoundland Medical Association rated it as one doctor to every 1,600 or 1,700 people compared with the Canadian average of one to every 800 people.

Dr. Howe did not say how many doctors his department will be looking for, but there are 19 cottage hospitals on the island with two or more resident doctors. The largest, James Paton Memorial Hospital at Gander, has 12 doctors when fully staffed.

SALARIES GO UP

Since the introduction of medical care, doctor's salaries have increased. Last year, the average gross fee for service payments was: general practitioners $45,000; medical specialists $46,800; surgical specialists $56,000.

However, one general practitioner earned more than the highest-paid specialists. The figure was $142,688 while the specialist, a surgeon, earned $131,541. The lowest payment, $16,610, went to a surgeon.

Dr. W. David Parsons of the Newfoundland Medical Association said: "The shortage of doctors in the province is the reason why the average net professional income of Newfoundland doctors is the highest in Canada.

"The fee schedule is much the same as Ontario's but, because of the shortage, doctors see more patients, work longer hours and consequently receive higher earnings."

Dr. Harry Roberts of St. John's, president of the Canadian Medical Association, said: "Doctors must take the lead in curtailing exorbitant medical-care income among some colleagues.

During the last decase or so there has been a big increase in Newfoundland's health costs. Added to considerable hospital construction and improvements are comprehensive hospital insurance and free diagnostic service. In the same period, the population increased by about 100,000.

The college has an enrolment of 167 this year and 145 are Newfoundlanders. The first graduates from the college will be available in 1974.

P.E.I. Prepares to Welcome Its Centennial in New Year

By HOWARD COLLINS

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — Prince Edward Island, a reluctant entrant into Confederation in 1873 when the burden of a heavy public debt forced union, will celebrate its centennial as a Canadian province next year.

Governor-General Roland Michener will officially open the birthday celebrations here Dec. 31 by lighting the centennial flame and then will attend a New Year's Eve ball.

From that point, hardly a week will pass without festivities of one sort or another on the island, Canada's smallest province with a population of about 110,000.

DEBT TAKEN OVER

For islanders, this will be their third centennial in less than 10 years. In 1964 they celebrated the 100th anniversary of the first meeting of the Fathers of Confederation, held in an ante-room of the rough stone building still used by the provincial legislature.

Three years later, P.E.I. celebrated with the rest of Canada the birthday of Confederation in 1867.

But there was a decided lack of enthusiasm for Confederation here in 1867 when islanders decided not to join and then rejected overtures from Canada in the next couple of years. However, heavy debt incurred in construction of a railway that began in 1871 forced the legislature to reconsider.

When the colony finally became a province July 1, 1873, the terms included an agreement that the federal government would take over the $4-million railway debt.

And earlier this year, the federal government gave Prince Edward Island another reward for becoming a province: a $1-million centennial grant to help preserve the heritage of the province. Most of it will be spent on building four museums, three showing agriculture, fisheries and shipbuilding in the 1870s and one portraying Canada Today.

Community Services Minister Robert Schurman, a former broadcaster and the man responsible for centennial planning, said the centennial commission felt that too little attention had been paid in the past to the heritage of P.E.I. as well as the rest of Canada.

"Let's face it, a small province like P.E.I., and some larger ones as well, can't put all the money it would like into such projects," said Mr. Schurman. "This grant from the federal government represented an excellent opportunity."

QUEEN WILL VISIT

The highlight of the celebrations will come mid-way through the year when the Queen visits the province June 29-July 4.

Other events include a visit by the band and musical ride of the RCMP, also celebrating its 100th anniversary in 1873.

In the fall, organizers hope to re-enact the sacking of Charlottetown in 1775 by Yankee privateers. The Americans stole, among other things, the Silver Seal of the colony, but they got little thanks for their efforts.

When the ships made home port in Marblehead, Mass., Gen. George Washington ordered that the captains be imprisoned.

It is hoped the governor of Massachusetts will be able to attend celebrations here. Efforts are being made to find the stolen seal in Massachusetts, but officials aren't hopeful that it will be uncovered.

Film festivals, regattas, national sports tournaments and even a frog-jumping contest are among the events planned for Centennial Year.

Mr. Schurman said the commission intends to make it a "birthday party" for islanders, but hoped it won't keep the usual summer influx of tourists away.

NEXT IN 2005

He said the 1964 centennial of the Fathers of Confederation meeting here had been "over-promoted" and officials were taking precautions so it wouldn't happen again. Tourists, who provide the island with one of its major industries, stayed away that year for fear that accommodations wouldn't be available.

The centennial celebrations here will be the last in Canada this century. The next will be in 2005 when Alberta and Saskatchewan mark their 100th anniversaries as provinces.

Sewer Decision Reserved

A decision is not expected until at least the end of the year in a lengthy dispute over costs of a sewer contract involving Dillingham Corp. Canada Ltd. and the Capital Regional District.

Arbitration hearings into claims by the company for extra costs of $585,378 in the $2.25 million contract lasted eight weeks in several stages, most of them in Vancouver. They ended last week.

A Cancer of Loneliness —The Way of a Suicide

A remark attributed to the poetess, Pauline Johnson, which helps to explain her stoicism and serenity in the last years of her life when she was desperately ill with cancer, now comes to mind. "Get out, whatever the weather," she told a friend. "It's the only way to cure the blues."

I've been wondering if perhaps the Mohawk Princess may not have meant it in a broader sense than simply to explain her daily walks, rain or shine, in Stanley Park, if perhaps she wasn't referring to the need to get out of oneself, whatever the weather of the spirit.

It's a thought that occurs as the result of watching the Public Broadcasting Service's chilling documentary on the subject of suicide in the western world, a program that noted, among other sad statistics, that 20,000 Canadians will try to take their own lives this year and that one in every 10 will succeed only too well.

There was a common denominator in these accounts of personal experience with despair. It was loneliness. With one or two exceptions we were seeing people whose problems were magnified by a kind of self-imposed solitary confinement, both physically and mentally. The men in particular (more women, it seems, attempt suicide than men, but more men succeed) described conditions of such absolute defeat that they invited self-destruction. Yet many of the problems were minor ones that had become an obsession.

It seemed clear throughout the program that there are vast numbers of men and women who destroy themselves because they've persisted in a frontal struggle against their troubles, which then seem insurmountable, when they might have escaped or circumvented them by simply walking away, "whatever the weather."

★ ★ ★

If this is true, if people withdraw to brood over and unwittingly inflate their often commonplace failures or disappointments, then it may be that many suicides may be attributed not to specific difficulties, but to loneliness itself.

Just as solitary confinement in our penal system is considered the most intolerable, torturing punishment, so its effects as a private sentence may have lethal results.

Loneliness, in this sense, is not synonymous with aloneness. Some of my closest friends are old-age pensioners who live by themselves. They lead happy, purposeful lives with only the occasional luxury of companionship. Most, indeed, prefer that way of life.

They're alone as, in fact, Pauline most often was, but far from lonely. They have their gardens, the endless projects about their houses, their fishing, their hobbies, their books, their memories. These interests, along with independence and pride, are very often workable substitutes, by choice, for social encounters.

My father, who knew her well in her last years, told me that Pauline, herself, was "strangely alone," yet she possessed an unconquerable spirit that sustained her.

But the man or woman who goes into solitude gathering his problem close to himself, bruised and battered as an animal entering a cave to tend his wounds, finds neither solutions nor contentment. The problem that caused him to retreat is then compounded by loneliness itself. A new and greater burden is added to that special, localized hurt that began the exile.

This is a loneliness that may grip a man though he is in the crowd, though he goes through the motions of normal living, and is a kind of cancer in itself.

The condition of irrationality or self-pity or the aberrations of guilt that cause people to destroy themselves would seem to come as much from this sort of secret torment as it does from the more isolated causes for the abandonment of all hope.

Thus when a woman on the program expressed the opinion that society shouldn't try to stand in the suicide's way, that she is an example of one who "simply could never make the grade" and regularly contemplates self-destruction, it seemed clear that she'd reached this dismal conclusion through an attitude of loneliness, of living so closely with her illusion of failure and nourishing it with sorrow, that it had become a form of insanity.

It seems impossible to communicate sensibly with such a person, to console her with the fact that no one really "makes the grade" to perfection, to assure her that the sun is really bright and constant behind the artificial clouds that are so largely of her creation.

Loneliness, then, may be the greatest barrier, a mere state of mind yet impenetrable, the last giant step to the point of no return. How many, I wonder, would have gone on to enjoy the gift of life if they'd take Pauline's way instead?

'Perfect Fall'

Last month was the driest in 61 years and the sunniest since 1952 and for the most part the weather pattern is continuing this month, he said.

While some intense storms have been brewed in the north Pacific, they have been deflected north and south of Vancouver Island and unseasonably good weather is expected to continue for "a day or two."

FAULTY WIRING BLAMED FOR FIRE

Fire started by faulty wiring caused an estimated $8,000 damage Tuesday to the home of Warren D. Craig, 1327 Carnsew.

Victoria deputy fire chief R. J. (Carl) Coates, said wiring attached to a sewing machine caused the fire to start on the floor of a spare bedroom. It spread to the wall and the dresser adjacent to the wall.

"There was heavy smoke damage to the rest of the house," said Coates.

Zeller's Sets Review Of Holiday Openings

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A senior officer of Zeller's stores today said the chain will review its policy after being criticized for doing business in Victoria on three recent public holidays.

William W. Tinmouth, company secretary and general counsel in Montreal, commented on criticism by Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis who called for public censure of Zeller's, particularly for being open Remembrance Day.

"Perhaps we should be more sensitive to Remembrance Day in a city like Victoria where the population is much older and more cognizant of what the day signifies," Tinmouth said.

He said store hours are generally a local management responsibility and usually they follow statutory holidays. He said he did not know the circumstances with regard to the Victoria branch store being open Labor Day and Thanksgiving Day, the two other holidays referred to by Curtis.

Earlier criticism had come from Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan, who deplored the flouting of Remembrance Day and Labor Day.

Tinmouth said "Zeller's, in opening its store those three days in Victoria was perhaps not sufficiently sensitive to local feeling."

He wanted to check further with the store manager and regional vice-president of Zeller's, noting that store hours vary from one city to another and are usually governed by municipal bylaws.

Remembrance Day, Thanksgiving and Labor Day are three of the nine public holidays declared by the Municipal Act as store closing days in B.C.

Curtis had called for measures by the community to "let management know we object to this very strongly."

He accused Zeller's of deliberately eroding or ignoring all major holidays and said it was time the community "stood up on our own feet" to say that was "not OK in Victoria."

Jobs Not Flowers Says Labor Chief

The decline of industry in Greater Victoria should be met by creation of an industrial development commission and greater public awareness of the importance of jobs, Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan said Tuesday.

The conventional outlook of Victoria is slanted towards flowers and fountains," he said. "Jobs are one of the most important parts of the community."

While there was no specific outcome from the "round table" discussion at the meeting, Ryan said Hempsall promised he would look into the whole subject.

"We all noted the lack of an industrial development commission in the region and there do not seem to be any sites marked out and very little is done about it," Ryan said after meeting Hempsall.

"There was agreement that very little is being done about developing industrial sites in the region, there is not much emphasis on this. We explored ways and means to trigger more active interest in industrial development."

Not only does the community not seem to be vitally interested in this said Ryan, but "it is not high on the priorities of municipal and regional government in this area."

Trustee Explodes Over Doctor's Bill

A general practitioner has billed Greater Victoria school board $100 for his appearance before a board investigating the firing of two tenured teachers.

And he's got Trustee Peter Bunn hopping mad.

"Here's a $50,000 a year salary bracket man screwing the board for a fee in what to my mind is a citizenship thing," Bunn told a business committee meeting Tuesday night.

Bunn said he saw Dr. D. M. Whitley for only an hour or two at the five-day October board of reference hearing into the firing of teachers Evelyn Ball and Bona McMurchie.

Bunn told the committee he took a whole day off his contracting business because he wanted to be informed on the new proceedings involved in the newly-set up avenue of appeal for teachers.

"It seems this doctor can't spare a couple of hours of his time to perform what seems to me a civic service," Bunn said. "It's amoral."

Trustee Carron Jameson, a dentist, said he thought $100 was a standard minimum fee for a GP's appearance in court as an expert witness.

In the October hearing, Whitley testified that he must have been "facetious" when he told the two teachers, who claimed they both had influenza, they should go to Arizona.

The appeal board reinstated the teachers following the hearing, with the explanation that failure to obtain leave of absence could not be regarded as neglect of duty on the part of teachers who were ill.

The school board has appealed the decision.

Smoke Dealers 'Wait and See'

Imperial Tobacco Products Ltd. announced an increase in the wholesale price of cigarettes last week and predicted that it would mean an increase of about two cents a package.

Only one local department store and one small grocery store surveyed were emphatic about their plans to raise the package cost of cigarettes "probably one or two cents."

Most of other stores said they planned to wait and see what their competitors did.

Two vending companies in the city said they had raised the cost of a package to 60 cents several months ago in anticipation of rising wholesale costs.

A third company, whose machines had still been collecting 55 cents a package, said it would raise its prices within the next two weeks.

One tobacco store owner said the rising prices presented him with a dilemna since he faced department and grocery store competitors who could cover rising costs in other ways and not raise their retail cigarette prices.

"We can't do that, because we only sell tobacco," he said, "and if we don't raise our prices we'll suffer a loss."

Another grocery store owner said the price war was forcing him to sell below a profitable level now and the new prices would make it even more difficult for him.

"We're subsidizing the tobacco industry as it is," he said, "we could never make enough just selling cigarettes."

Most retail outlets are selling a regular cigarette package for 51 or 52 cents and a carton of 10 packages for $4.60 to $4.70.

Several retailers in town said they have never been formally notified of the increase in price, which is to be effective Nov. 20, and are puzzled that the media was informed without their knowledge.

Expenditure of $1M Needed on Vic High

Victoria Secondary School needs $1 million spent on it — soon.

"That's what we're talking about to bring the school up to 1973 standards," Trustee Peter Bunn told Greater Victoria school board's school support committee Tuesday night.

"It's a most important school. How are we going to make it enjoyable to go there?" asked Trustee Daphne Temple.

An administration report showed that lighting in the school's hallways was as much as a quarter the official standard.

The report said the school building is "in serious need of a substantial overhaul to its main service systems, fire and science safety and functional surface areas."

Plumbing, electrics, heating, science equipment, classrooms are "worn out," the report said.

Fire safety is also unsatisfactory, the report said, with the fire chief seeking improvements.

The school building has been a drain on school district funds, with "considerably higher" maintenance costs than other schools since 1956.

"As an average, this school board has spent over $33,000 per year on school maintenance and $3,500 per year on painting," the report said.

Estimated maintenance projects for 1973 amount to $47,000.

Bunn said that in considering the $1 million figure it should be remembered that the building has a valuation of $3½ million.

The committee agreed to consider putting the sum in a 1974 building referendum.

Victoria Secondary School, at 1260 Grant, is generally considered a landmark. The building is more than half a century old, although the school has existed for nearly a century.

ARBITRATION

Free bargaining between boards and staff, restored by the new provincial government this fall, had reached no agreement by the Nov. 14 deadline laid down by law.

Sooke district's 304 teachers vote on committee agreement tonight. If the vote fails, that contract will also be determined by arbitration.

In deciding salary increases, a provincially-appointed arbitrator takes into account awards made in industry and in school districts where agreement has been reached. The decision is announced by Dec. 31.

New Museum Sought For Antique Equipment

The ancient plows, threshers, steam-driven balers and other pioneer quipment belong to Saanich Historical Artifacts Society which is the only live "working museum" in B.C.

Shrieking steam engines and clanking tractors form a main attraction each year at Saanichton Fair and Society members put on frequent machine demonstrations for local school groups.

Willard Michell, society director and museum curator, has asked Central Saanich council to purchase two acres of land from the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society in order to build permanent exhibition barns.

Members of the artifacts group put in several hours each week overhauling engines, rebuilding wagon wheels, painting farm wagons and "generally enjoying themselves," says Michell.

Oldest piece of working machinery is an 1882 threshing machine. The barns also contain an elegant "democrat" buggy and several farm sleighs, in addition to the workaday equipment.

Central Saanich council has asked Michell to prepare a list of the Society's long-range plans in order to consider the requested land purchase.

ARGENTINE WOMAN PREGNANT AFTER OVARY TRANSPLANT

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — A young Argentine woman may be the first in history to give birth after an ovary transplant, her doctors say. The baby is due in March, and so far there are no complications.

A report on the case was to be made today to the Brazil-Israeli Congress of Fertility and Sterility by Dr. Raul Blanco, head of the Argentine surgical team that performed the transplant last March in Buenos Aires.

"The pregnancy already is more than three months in progress, and it is completely normal," Dr. Blanco said in an interview.

"We have not encountered any symptoms of rejection so far, and we have not administered any treatment to prevent this possibility."

The 38-year-old surgeon acknowledged that the genetic characteristics of the baby will be those of the woman who donated the ovary and not the mother. He said this could create psychological problems for both women.

But "all of the developments that make a woman a mother— the conception, the implanting of the egg in the uterus, the pregnancy and finally the birth—all of these processes of motherhood occur in the recipient and not the donor," he added.

In an effort to avoid psychological disturbances among the mother, father and donor, Blanco's 25-man team at Buenos Aires' Alvear Hospital included a psychiatrist. His chief task has been to assure the woman receiving the transplant that it will not affect her personality and to convince the donor that she can have children normally despite the removal of one of her two ovaries.

The doctor declined to give personal details of the pregnant woman, her husband or the donor, including their ages and occupations, "to avoid questions of possession between the two women."

Jury Clears Ex-Police Chief

ANTIGONISH, N.S. (CP) — A grand jury Tuesday dismissed eight charges of fraud, theft and attempting to obstruct justice against former town police chief Malcolm MacEachern.

Mr. MacEachern had pleaded not guilty to all eight charges.

The 44-year-old father of six resigned last April when RCMP investigated police affairs in the community. He had been police chief for 11 years. Since his resignation he has been working as a truck driver.

He said there is a move afoot to abolish grand juries, but this case illustrates how beneficial they can be.

"It is an important safeguard for the accused," he said.

In his instructions to the grand jury, Mr. Justice Gordon L. S. Hart explained that all four fraud charges alleged that Mr. MacEachern had collected cash by falsely holding himself out to be a person with authority to levy and collect fines.

The two theft charges concernel town and provincial funds, and the two charges of obstructing justice involved drivers arrested for impairment.

The Crown alleged that the drivers were subsequently fined for lesser offences under town bylaws, but did not go before a judge.

MOBBED BY FRIENDS

Mr. MacEachern was mobbed by friends and former police colleagues after the verdict.

"The town was 100 per cent behind him," he said. "There was no way charges should have been laid in the first place."

Mr. MacEachern described the eight-month waiting period between the laying of the charges and Tuesday's verdict as "not very good."

"I lost 12 pounds," he said, "but I never felt I was guilty . . . and neighbors and friends stood behind me. I don't think anybody wanted to see me convicted."

The town has been policed by the RCMP since July, when council disbanded the police force following a pay dispute with the nine policemen.

Toronto Finds Secret Site For Garbage

TORONTO (CP) — Metropolitan Toronto has agreed to have CP Rail haul its garbage somewhere else, but won't say where it expects it to be dumped.

"There is no sense stirring up a lot of towns and cities," Metro Chairman Albert Campbell told council.

When a final agreement is signed with CP Rail, the company would be expected to reveal the dump sites, he said.

Works Commissioner Ross Clark was authorized Tuesday to negotiate the first stage of the agreement with CP Rail, in a plan to dump 400,000 tons of garbage annually at 2,000 acres of unnamed dumps.

The plan calls for the rail line to haul the garbage at $6.40 a ton or more than $2.5 million a year.

Mr. Clark said rail hauling is only one method of disposing of garbage from large urban centres.

He said the federal government is studying removal of garbage from cities by pipeline.

Dispenser Linked With Polio

GREENWICH, Conn. (UPI) — A federal health official said a contaminated drink dispenser in a Daycroft school locker room may have caused an outbreak of polio at the school last month.

It was disclosed Tuesday that the fruit juice dispenser, equipped with a spray cooling system similar to those found in commercial establishments, may have been the common source for the 11 polio cases originating at the school.

Dr. Dewayne Andrews, a federal epidemiologist assigned to the state health department, said the spray arm in the dispenser was broken, causing students to mix the juice with a stick or their hands.

None of the students at the school located on the former campus of the Rosemary Hall school, had received polio immunization because of religious beliefs.

Spy's Wife Jailed 2½ Years

WINCHESTER, England (Reuter) — The wife of a British naval torpedo expert jailed for spying for the Soviet Union was sentenced to 30 months' imprisonment today for leading her husband intoh for leading her husband into his espionage activities.

Maureen Bingham, 35-year-old mother of four, was found guilty last month of breaking the Official Secrets Act by making contact with the Soviet embassy in London to suggest selling confidential information.

Her husband, Sub.-Lt. David Bingham, was sentenced to 21 years' imprisonment last March after a court was told he had betrayed information about secret underwater weapons that was "almost beyond price."

After her husband's conviction, Mrs. Bingham admitted to reporters that she had led her husband into spying.

She said her husband had been opposed to spying but she had persuaded him that they could obtain money from the Russians to pay off household debts.

NDP Drafts Terms for Liberals

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — A list of eight or nine demands will be laid before Prime Minister Trudeau and his minority Liberal government, by the New Democratic Party, as the price for its support in Parliament, Stanley Knowles, NDP House leader said here today.

There will be considerable negotiations behind the scenes, he said, to ascertain just how many of the NDP "demands" or "objectives" the Trudeau government will be prepared to accept.

Knowles conceded that the NDP would be prepared to negotiate on its list of demands and would not necessarily insist that the entire list had to be accepted by the Liberal minority government.

The list includes one demand for a substantial increase in the old age pension and a requirement that the pension be made available at age 60 for those who leave the labor market.

The NDP will also insist on strong measures being taken to ease the unemployment problem.

TAX REFORMS

Tax reform moves will be included in the list.

The NDP held a meeting of its federal council and a caucus meeting in Toronto over the Remembrance Day weekend.

At the caucus an attempt was made to hammer out the list of demands or objectives that the NDP will set out.

The work was carried on in Ottawa Tuesday.

NDP Leader David Lewis may make the list of "objectives" or "demands" public at a press conference later this week.

Lewis is on record as determined, as NDP leader, to do his best to make Parliament function despite it being a House of minorities.

However that will depend on whether the minority government is prepared to meet the objectives or demands the NDP will place before Trudeau.

Knowles said Tuesday on his return from Toronto that it was apparent that the western NDP members were particularly aware of the "very strong anti-Trudeau feeling among the voters."

While he did not say so, it is apparent that the NDP members from the west will be getting strong reactions from their supporters in Western Canada if the party continues to maintain a Trudeau government in office.

Knowles said if the Trudeau government is defeated on a confidence vote with the help of the NDP in the Commons, the NDP would then lay its list of demands before Progressive Conservative leader Robert Stanfield.

Whether the Conservatives wold have the NDP support in the House to form a minority government would depend on Stanfield's reaction to the list.

STANFIELD'S OPTION

If he rejected most of the objectives or demands the NDP might withdraw its support and a general election would be precipitated.

Knowles conceded that there were a lot of "permutations and combinations." He said the NDP would have to "play it by ear."

The NDP House leader said it is not clear what position Trudeau will take if he wins a confidence motion on the throne speech and is defeated two or three weeks later in the House.

Would he go to Governor-General Roland Michener and seek dissolution, or would he recommend that the governor-general call on Stanfield to try to form a government?

That is the problem confronting the NDP as it considers its strategy for the upcoming session of Parliament.

The NDP is convinced the Canadian people do not want another election immediately and accordingly will try to do its best to make this new Parliament function, said Knowles.

16 Cancer Fighters Honored

WASHINGTON (WP) — Sixteen medical scientists who pioneered in the use of drugs to successfully treat formerly fatal cancers have won the 1972 Albert Lasker medical research awards.

In honoring doctors for the treatment of patients the Albert and Mary Lassker Foundation departed from its usual policy of giving at least one award to a scientist for basic research into disease.

But Mary Lasker, president of the foundation, said this year's 16 winners were picked to emphasize the new successes in the treatment of certain forms of cancer.

The most exciting advances in the treatment of cancer have been in the use of combinations of powerful drugs. Cancer experts now speak of cures in such previously fatal cancers as Hodgkin's disease and leukemia as well as other, less frequent cancers.

Dr. A. Hamblin Letton, president of the American Cancer Society, reported that many more cancer patients could be saved through the use of the best forms of therapy and early detection.

A special award was given to Dr. C. Gordon Zubrod, who heads the drug treatment program at the National Cancer Institute. He was cited for administrative leadership in setting up experiments to find the best drugs to fight cancer and the best ways to use them.

MONEY IN MUCK...

But now, says his father, Carl has made $8,000 with other people's discards. He's doing so well, he plans on putting himself through college — and taking his family to Italy.

"All the people in the neighborhood know I want their bottles and cans, and they save them for me," said the sixth-grader.

He sells the trash to glass and can manufacturers, and he says he can make as much as 10 cents a bottle.

He says he gets 10 cents a pound for aluminum cans and 36 cents a case for beer bottles. He also collects newspapers and turns them over free to his church.

"I'm saving the money for college," he said. He is an accordionist and he plans to study music.

B.C. Tel Set To Battle Takeover

B.C. Tel president J. Ernest Richardson Tuesday assured shareholders the company will fight to protect their interests in the event of a takeover bid by the provincial government.

At the same tiime he released figures showing net earnings for the months ended Sept. 30 were $14.5 million, up 31 per cent from the same period in 1971.

Earnings per share are $4.62 compared with $3.52 in the same period last year.

Richardson said the company is incorporated by a special act of Parliament and "it follows, therefore, that only the Parliament at Ottawa can legislate as to the acquisition of its assets or preferred or ordinary shares."

He added: "Shareholders should have confidence that we will take every step necessary to protect their interests."

On Oct. 12 Premier Barrett repeated his campaign pledge to take over the telephone company but did not say when it would be done.

Operating revenues for the nine months were $168 million while operating expenses were $117 million. New earnings totalled $14,961,0000 compared with $10,139,000 in 1971.

Return on invested capital is 5.86 per cent compared with 5.25 per cent in 1971.

Of the $4.62 per share earnings, 36 cents per share was attributed to temporary income tax deductions.

Driver Points 'Invalid'

British Columbia's demerit point system for drivers convicted under the Motor Vehicle Act has been ruled unconstitutional by a Vancouver judge.

In dismissing a speeding charge against a University of B.C. student Tuesday in provincial court Judge Douglas Hume ruled the demerit point system is "unconstitutional, vague and discriminatory."

He said the law is unconstitutional because it doesn't allow for equal treatment of all persons accused, and it is vague because it doesn't say how or when points can be removed from a driver's record.

Informed of the ruling Attorney-General Alex Macdonald expressed concern, and said he may make a statement on the judge's action later today.

Under the system introduced in October, 1968, a driver accumulates demerits for each traffic violation and his record is stored on magnetic tape. He gets a warning letter when the total reaches six demerits.

At nine demerits the computer in the motor vehicle branch automatically kicks out the record and the branch gives the offending driver an opportunity to show just cause why his licence should not be suspended for 30 days.

Hydro Men Back to Work

Times News Services

MONTREAL—Striking Hydro-Quebec workers began to filter back to work today 90 minutes after the provincial legislature passed emergency legislation ordering the strikers to maintain essential services.

But thousands of people are still without power in the wake of the nine-day walkout by 8,500 hydro employees.

Under the terms of the crisis legislation, the strikers have been told to maintain essential services or face stiff fines.

About 29,000 people in the province were without power Tuesday and some firms, crimped by blackouts, were laying off employees.

One hydro spokesman said there seemed to be no problem with the return to work.

"The union seems to be calling all their people in.

"I can't tell you how many people will return to work.

"It's hard to predict across the province but we think most of our personnel here in Montreal will be on the job."

He said repair crews headed out to fix major power breaks across the province as soon as Hydro-Quebec officials called them and informed them of the legislation.

"I have not heard of any trouble and we really aren't anticipating any," he added.

The strike had forced many frustrated Montrealers either to leave their homes, rent electrical generators or just put up with the lack of electricity.

With routine power breakdowns cutting electricity for periods of more than a week, problems have ranged from invalids being trapped inside their apartments to supplies of frozen goods being ruined.

Hydro-Quebec says up to 160,000 Montrealers have been affected by the strike at various times.

In suburban Cote St. Luc where about 4,000 residents were blacked out since within minutes of the Hydro workers' walkout until 8 o'clock this morning — the usual neighborhood sounds have been augmented by the whirr of auxiliary generators.

Many other residents of the relatively affluent suburb have deserted their homes to take refuge in nearby hotels or the homes of friends.

The hydro workers' union

The Things Travellers Carry . . .

LONDON (UPI) — Aerospace Minister Michael Heseltine told a pilots' meeting Tuesday that between July and October, British Overseas Airways Corp. staff members at London Airport found and took from passengers through anti-hijacking measures:

—19 revolvers, pistols, shotguns and rifles.

—More than 300 rounds of ammunition.

They also discovered 160 antique, replica or toy guns, he added.

TANKER SINKS SHIP

ATHENS (AP) — A giant Greek oil tanker, on a trial run without cargo, and a Greek Navy troop ship collided today in the Saronic Gulf. The navy ship sank and shipping sources said 46 sailors were missing. Thirteen others were rescued.

The tanker was identified as the 100,175-ton World Hero, owned by Greek shipping magnate Stavros Niarchos. The military vessel was reported to be the Merlin.

There were no reports of casualties on the tanker.

The World Hero, built in 1970 in Japan, is described in the Greek shipping directory as the biggest of Niarchos' fleet of 80 ships.

The collision occured in clear weather. The sea was calm.

SPEC URGES AUTO CURBS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society says 67 per cent of oil pollution in the oceans comes from waste automotive and industrial lubricating oil.

The Vancouver organization, in a report funded by a federal local initiatives grant, recommends curbing automotive oil pollution by building rapid transit systems in all metropolitan areas and banning all but commercial vehicles from the downtown core of cities.

Canadian Union Gets $30,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Ironworkers Union, Local 1, was awarded $30,000 damages against the International Ironworkers Union Tuesday for what British Columbia Supreme Court Justice F. C. Munroe described as "outrageous conduct" in putting the fledgling Canadian union out of business.

The Canadian union was formed in 1960 by a group who broke away from the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Ironworkers Union, Local 97.

The litigation began in 1966 when the Canadian union sued the international for damages for alleged unlawful interference.

The Canadian union lost but took its case on to the B.C. Court of Appeal.

There it won and the issue was sent back to B.C. Supreme Court for a hearing on the amount of damages to be awarded.

Mr. Justice Munroe in his decision to assess the international union referred to an agreement made in July, 1966 between Amalgamated Construction Association—a group representing contractors—and the international union.

"Under that agreement, in order to end an illegal strike, and illegal picketing, members of the construction association agreed (with the international union) under coersion and intimidation that they would not in future let out contracts or entertain bids from subcontractors who had entered into collective agreement with the plaintiff (the Canadian union) the certified bargaining agent for their ironworker employees," said the judge.

He said the Building Trades Council, representing con-

BOYS WERE BOMBS

BELFAST (CP) — British soldiers stopped two boys for questioning in West Belfast today and found themselves talking to two "human bombs."

The boys, 15 and 16, were carrying 4½ pounds of gelignite, a detonator and fuses.

They were handed over to police. Earlier, a loaded pistol and 150 rounds of ammunition were found in a school in the city's Roman Catholic Falls Road area.

Storms Batter East

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Heavy snow, freezing rain and drifting snow tormented areas from the Ohio Valley to New England today and gale warnings continued for much of the Atlantic Coast.

Strong winds lashed the lower Great Lakes and the North Atlantic coast. The New England storm moved toward Nova Scotia after leaving up to a foot of snow in some northern states.

The powerful, far-reaching storm has been blamed for at least 19 deaths since Monday as it moved toward the Atlantic. At least three other persons died in weather-related incidents in other sections of the United States.

Meanwhile, flood victims started returning to their water-soaked homes in Michigan and Ohio in the wake of a storm which lashed the shorelines of Lakes Erie, Huron and St. Clair on Tuesday.

Authorities estimated the number of evacuees at more than 10,000 along a 200-mile stretch of Lake Erie and Lake Huron shoreline extending from Ohio's Cuyahoga County west to Toledo and north to Michigan's Saginaw Bay.

In some areas curfews were in effect and National Guard troops were on duty to prevent looting.

Winds to 45 miles an hour sent waves up to 15 feet high crashing against Michigan and Ohio lakefront areas.

Gale warnings were posted today from Eastport, Me., to New Jersey, with small-craft warnings flying as far south as Savannah, Ga. Gale warnings were also up along Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

Cuba Offers Hijack Talks

MIAMI (UPI) — Cuba said today it has no desire to provide a refuge for common criminals fleeing the United States and offered to work out a "broad agreement" with the U.S. government to halt airline hijackings.

The offer was made in an official government statement read over Havana radio in a broadcast monitored in Miami.

In Washington, the state department said it would seek to reopen negotiations with the Castro government on ways to stop air pirates from using Cuba as a haven.

The Cuban government conditioned its offer to previously stated demands — that the United States return Cubans who flee the island in stolen planes and ships, and that alleged sabotage and commando raids from U.S. territory cease.

"It is in the mutual interest of both countries to take steps leading to a solution of this problem," the official statement said.

Meanwhile, in Australia, police today shot and killed an airline hijacker who commandeered an Ansett Airlines Fokker Friendship plane of four in Australia's first hijacking incident.

Police said the hijacker died of his wounds at a hospital following a shootout at Alice Springs airport. They said a police constable who was wounded in the gunfight remained in serious condition.

Police said the hijacker, who remained unidentified, was gunned down after he opened fire on three policemen.

An airline stewardess held hostage by the man broke away just before the shooting erupted, police said.

A spokesman for Ansett Airlines said the man, armed with a sawed-off .22 calibre rifle, entered the flight deck as the plane made its final approach to Alice Springs airport from Adelaide.

Then, the airline said, he told the pilots he wanted a light aircraft and a parachute ready for him when the aircraft landed. He made no other demands, the spokesman said.

As the hijacker walked to the light plane, with his rifle trained on one of the stewardesses, he was jumped by a plainclothes detective who knocked the rifle from his hands, authorities said. The man broke away from the policeman and ran into the bush on the side of the runway.

Heaviest Strikes Against North

Times News Services

SAIGON — The U.S. Command today reported the heaviest air strikes against North Vietnam since President Nixon cut back the air war nearly a month ago.

The B-52 raids were also the deepest into North Vietnam since last spring, the bombers striking within 20 miles of the 20th parallel limit set by Nixon to keep the bombing away from Hanoi and Haiphong during ceasefire negotiations. The parallel runs 65 miles south of Hanoi and Haiphong.

The 340 total was a record since the air war was restricted on Oct. 23. The previous high was Oct. 15 when a total of about 365 sorties were flown (a sortie is one flight by one plane). But no restrictions were on at that time.

As the latest strikes were announced, North Vietnam accused the United States of "carpet bombing" raids earlier this week that caused "many casualities to the civilian population."

U.S. Navy pilots used "walleye" radar-guided bombs to destroy three bridges near Vinh, 164 miles south of Hanoi, U.S. spokesmen said. The avowed aim of the bombing, as it has been since the air war resumed April 6, was to choke off North Vietnamese supplies flowing south.

Showdown Ahead?

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — The Peronist-dominated General Labor Confederation said today it is declaring a general strike Friday so workers can welcome former dictator Juan D. Peron home after his 17-year exile. The governing military junta earlier banned all public demonstrations until further notice, thus setting the stage for a possible showdown between troops and strikers.

Flight Cancelled

MONTREAL (CP) — A strike by about 240 Nordair Ltd. employees in Quebec, Ontario and the Northwest Territories forced the airline to cancel at least one of its 30 scheduled flights today, a Nordair spokesman said.

Lofty Blaze

CHICAGO (UPI) — A spectacular fire raced through the 95th, 96th and 97th floors of the John Hancock Centre today, damaging a restaurant and forcing about 50 residents to seek the safety of lower floors. Fire Commissioner John Quinn said nobody was injured and that the fire was put out in an hour.

Warden: Let Some Drugs Into Jails

CALGARY (CP) — Society must run the risk of allowing some soft drugs to infiltrate its prisons if it wants to retain a humane penal system, says warden Pierre Jutras of the Drumheller correctional institute.

The warden, commenting on the possibility of drug abuse within institutions, said: "We are very concerned but the only way to stop it completely would be to keep the prisoners locked up for 24 hours a day with no visitors.

"When society as a whole has this problem with drugs it is bound to be reflected in our institutions, especially since more and more people are coming to prison for drug offences."

However, warden James Jackson of the Calgary correctional institute says he can't point to specific incidents of drug abuse at his institution, although he has his suspicions.

"We search the clothing of prisoners coming back from temporary absences and we warn visitors that they must not bring anything in, although we don't search them as a matter of course.

"And if we have reason to believe a person will attempt to bring in contraband we don't grant them permission to visit."

But one former prisoner, who declined to reveal his name, said he thought he wouldn't see another "joint" when he went to jail for the first time in 1966 for possession of marijuana, a four-month term at the Oakalla Prison in British Columbia.

"At Oakalla you could get anything you wanted — heroin, marijuana, hashish, LSD, MDA, anything," he said in a recent interview.

Later, he said, drug convictions resulting in a total of 31 months at Fort Saskatchewan jail and Drumheller showed Alberta's institutions shared much the same problem.

Hard drugs like heroin are rarely available, he said, "but a guy with a soft drug habit would not have to give it up because he's going to jail.

"In fact, I would say it is easy to get soft drugs like marijuana, LSD or prescription pills."

He added:

"Jail is a very boring place. You're in a state of depression all the time and drugs are a way of getting away from it all — they're a break, a holiday.

"There is a drug culture in jail — the so-called hippie-types who used drugs on the outside. They number about 20 to 30 per cent of the inmates usually. But about 80 per cent use drugs at some time during their stay no matter what they were like on the outside.

Warden Jutras said he has had about 12 cases in the last year of persons being caught possessing drugs within the institution or trying to bring them in from outside.

The contraband has always been of the "soft" kind, he said, including illegally-obtained prescription sedatives like librium as well as LSD and hashish.

"To say there is no problem is naive," he said.

Parents' Suits Feared

Could a school teacher one day be sued for giving a child a learning problem in the same way a doctor can be taken to court for giving a child a limp?

He asked the school board's administration committee Tuesday night to look into the need for buying malpractice insurance.

"We shouldn't wait for some big court case," he said. "There is a sharply increasing awareness among parents of the importance of education."

The administration agreed to seek the advice of the board's solicitor and report back.

Ney suggested that certain places showed higher rates of problematic school children than others.

"To a degree this is the result of teachers' personalities and not of socio-economic or other factors," he said.

Ney made the comments in explaining his motion that applicants for permanent teaching appointments should have personality evaluations.

By "personality evaluations," Ney meant psychological tests that could show profiles of deviant potential in people.

Trustee Lavina Greenwood said the idea of tests was offensive.

"After all, what are interviews conducted for?" she asked. "People can change. They can be charming at 30 and perfectly impossible at 45."

All Smiles as NDP Grassroots Meet

BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Smiles will be wide and back-slapping rampant 10 days from now in the convention rooms of Vancouver's plush Bayshore Inn.

The occasion will be the annual convention of the B.C. New Democrat Party, the party's first convention as the government party.

The happiness is understandable. After 39 years spent in an opposition role, the "socialist hordes" not only made it to the gates of British Columbia, they marched right in through the front door and took the place over. And if that kind of election victory doesn't make party regulars happy, it's hard to imagine what would.

More than 800 delegates will be attending the convention next week. And with the larger-than-ever complement of visitors and press people expected, attendance could well climb over 1,000 for the three-day affair.

NEVER SATISFIED

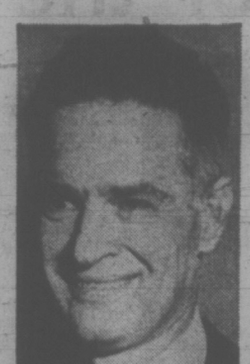
The NDP, by its very nature, he says, is never satisfied with the status quo.



STUPICH
. . . some will complain

"There will be people who will argue that we should have accomplished more in total or should have gone in different directions," Stupich said in a recent interview.

"I'm, not thinking of anything in particular when I say that," he said. "But it's just that certain people we have in our party are not going to be satisfied, even though in the short time we have been in, mountains may have been moved."

Stupich said he does not object to such criticism from the grass roots of the party.

"In fact I welcome it," he said. "The success of our government depends on us keeping in touch generally with people but with the party in particular.

"They are the ones who have to work to get us re-elected. They are the ones who have to know what we are doing, why we are doing it and why we are not doing other things."

But because the party is so new in its governing role, Stupich has attempted to change the scope of the convention. Instead of concentrating on general party policy, this year's effort will be aimed at working out regional problems.

SEVEN AREAS

The province has been divided up into seven areas — the north, the Kootenays, the central interior, Vancouver Island, Greater Vancouver, the Lower Mainland suburbs and the Fraser Valley.

Background papers will be prepared dealing with the specific problems in each area before the delegates get around to dealing with the problems of the community at large.

This concept of regionalism is a departure from the usual procedure at NDP conventions, Stupich said. The party ordinarily uses its convention as a vehicle to formulte policy, but this month's meeting has to be an exception. The government has not had a chance to fully implement the policies it was elected on, he said. So "we certainly don't want policies changed until we have had an opportunity to live up to our election promises."

Another element of the convention which is not likely to surprise too many people is the selection of a party leader for the coming year.

"I would not be tremendously surprised if someone were nominated to contest the leadership," said Stupich. "But I would be very surprised if he got any more than a half-dozen votes."

FORMALITY VOTE

The party leadership vote is taken at every convention but is destined to be little more than a formality this time around.

As far as Premier Barrett and his cabinet ministers are concerned, they will be used mainly in a consultative capacity, reporting on the situation in their separate departments, Stupich said.

Barrett will address the convention on its first night and is expected to speak in a general way on what the government has been doing and plans to do in the foreseeable future.

But that is about the extent of the participation by Barrett and of the cabinet. Backbench MLAs will be expected to participate more fully in debates and discussions, Stupich said.

A measure of the government's newness is the fact that the convention will be an entirely new experience to many of the NDP backbenchers. As a result, it will be a learning exercise for some.

Whatever else happens, there will be no domination of the convention proceedings by the party's elected members, Stupich said. The party just wouldn't stand for it.

Amendment Passed

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — California became the 22nd state to ratify the equal rights amendment to the U.S. constitution Monday. Thirty-eight state legislatures must approve the amendment guaranteeing women equal rights before it can become the 27th amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Quake Reported

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — The U.S. National Earthquake Information Centre says a mediumsized earthquake occurred about 50 miles off the coast of northern California at 11:10 p.m. EST Monday night.

Recount Upholds NDPer's Election

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — A recount of rejected ballots from 44 polls in the Nickel Belt riding Tuesday confirmed a seat in the Commons for New Democratic Party candidate John Rodriguez.

In the Oct. 30 federal election Mr. Rodriguez defeated incumbent Liberal Gaetan Serre, by about 2,000 votes, but election officials rejected 4,718 ballots.

Mr. Serre called for a recount after Liberal supporters claimed the majority of rejected ballots favored him with an X-marking after his name rather than in the circle on the ballot.

When a recount of rejected ballots in 44 of the 207 polls in the riding failed to indicate enough votes in favor of Mr. Serre to change the outcome of the election, the Liberal terminated the procedure.

Of the 1,690 rejected ballots counted Tuesday, 48.1 per cent were intended for Mr. Serre, and 39.4 per cent for Mr. Rodriguez.

Mr. Serre said before the recount that he needed at least 65 per cent of the rejected votes before further action would be taken to contest the result.

During the recount, District Court Judge James Cooper ruled he would not allow ballots to be counted in the official vote if the marking was outside the circle and beside the candidate's name.

He did say however, ballots marked both in the circle and beside the name would be counted as valid.

MIMIST ON FINE EDGE

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

The art of thought made visible—of minute anf perfect muscular control over every inch of the body; the golden art of silent communication.

That is the art of Claude St-Denis, Canada's gift to the ancient and rare skill of the mime.

Montreal-born St-Denis, an internationally noted performer made a single appearance in Victoria, Tuesday, before a capacity audience at Open Space on Fort Street.

From the moment the artist assumed his commedia dell' arte white - face makeup, through the dazzling 75-minute performance that followed, this was a classical evening in the theatre.

St-Denis has honed the comedic aspects of his art to a glistening edge as fine and sensitive as that of the great Stan Laurel. His fiendishly gleeful dentist and his "man in an elevator" for example, were packed with the childish malevolence and idiot panic that made Laurel's work so poignant.

Then we see him as the old, bent bell-ringer given a fleeting moment of youthful vigor by the great swinging of his bells until the stilling ropes and the dying echoes return him to the sorrow and the sourness of age.

He was assisted in his performance by Lucie Bertrand, who presented the titles of his various mimes and shared a scene in which she played an inflatable doll with style and fine discipline.

All French Classes Organized

The class would be offered to all Grade 7 students on a first come first served basis, with a minimum of 25 needed to set up the class.

No more than two classes would be organized for three years, with annual evaluation. Teachers would be French-speaking.

The proposal was made by Trustee Philip Ney and school superintendent A. J. Longmore following a trip to Montreal to inspect immersion programs in English-speaking areas of that city.

Immersion courses are currently being run in Coquitlam school district.

The Victoria class, or classes, proposal is "two or three months down the way," Longmore said.

A similar immersion program at Grade 1 level was recommended for one school to start in September, 1974.

Asia Drug Source

WASHINGTON (AP) — New official estimates from the bureau of narcotics and dangerous drugs say that 30 per cent of the 6.5 to 10 tons of illicit heroin entering the United States annually originates in Southeast Asia.

Firms Must Set Specific Objectives

By DAVID EGGLESTON
Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co.

Canada is now entering a period when her future prosperity will be determined by the ability to export not only raw material but also semi-manufactured and manufactured goods.

Great strains are being placed on this export drive by such factors as the suggested DISC (Domestic Internal Sales Corporation) in the U.S., and the approaching parity with the U.S. dollar.

Within this present uncertain economic climate and period of declining corporate profits it is vital that management makes use of all available techniques to improve its competitive position and bolster its profits.

Over the past several years, there has been a great deal of discussion about "management by objectives" and its role in industry. Although the system has been widely practised for many years, it is not universally accepted.

It has been tried and rejected by some companies because it failed to provide the benefits expected of it, while in others it has not yet been tried or is only now being introduced.

Management Memo

Management by objectives is the establishment of a number of specific and measurable objectives for each position within a company.

These objectives are over and above the normal "meet the budget" objective that is part of everybody's job. They are closely related to and derived from the long range plan for the company as a whole or its various component units.

ROLE IN MARKETING

The first and major function of management by objectives is to improve the profitability of a company by increasing the effectiveness of the marketing division. This can be accomplished by reducing unit costs or by increasing sales without proportionally increasing costs.

It results in a system where progress can be monitored by management to ensure that the results being achieved closely approximate corporate goals.

The second major purpose of such a program is to provide senior management with an equitable means of assessing the performance of both staff and junior management. Too often such assessments are based on subjective, qualitative judgments as no objective, quantitative techniques are available.

The satisfactory application of a "management by objectives" program will enable management to identify more accurately those making a significant contribution to corporate goals and who are capable of further assisting the company by entering or climbing the management structure.

These two basic functions hold true regardless of the division of the company to which they are applied. However, they are especially critical for marketing.

No matter how brilliant the research scientists or how efficient the production unit, if a company does not have a marketing group that is able to provide the consumer with the product he wants, where he wants it and at a price he is prepared to pay, that company will never succeed.

It is important to remember that a "management by objectives" program is a means to an end—increased profitability—and not an end in itself. Such programs fail too frequently because of a lack of appreciation of this point.

Management by objectives is merely a management tool, as are other techniques such as discounted cash flow, critical path analyses and decision trees. The tools are designed to enable managers to make the right decision at the right time.

Objectives based on the most current information available must be revised whenever major parameters change or as other new information becomes available. Flexibility in controlling the system is a prime requirement for success.

Objectives should be specific, not general. Fuzzy objectives usually beget fuzzy results. Objectives should not state only that sales must be increased, or costs cut—they should say by how much. No doubt should be left as to what the objective really is.

Objectives should be set in a positive way so that the result of an achieved objective is a direct improvement in the company's competitive position. However, while objectives should be positive, they should also be realistic.

An objective to develop a particular market should only be set if that market is known to exist. If not, the initial objective should be to establish whether such a market exists and then once that fact is established, a second objective can be set to define and develop that market in an approved manner.

Unrealistic objectives can prove demoralizing to the assigned person. Given an objective to develop a particular market, an employee who demonstrated that no such market existed would be judged to have failed his objective, even though he actually would have saved his company much time and money by his results.

On the other hand, the attainment of realistic objectives should demonstrate to the employee his position as an individual profit centre within the company and should result in an increase in his motivation to succeed.

Driver Points 'Invalid'

British Columbia's demerit point system for drivers convicted under the Motor Vehicle Act has been ruled unconstitutional by a Vancouver judge.

In dismissing a speeding charge against a University of B.C. student Tuesday in provincial court Judge Douglas Hume ruled the demerit point system is "unconstitutional, vague and discriminatory."

He said the law is unconstitutional because it doesn't allow for equal treatment of all persons accused, and it is vague because it doesn't say how or when points can be removed from a driver's record.

Informed of the ruling Attorney-General Alex Macdonald expressed concern, and said he may make a statement on the judge's action later today.

Under the system introduced in October, 1968, a driver accumulates demerits for each traffic violation and his record is stored on magnetic tape. He gets a warning letter when the total reaches six demerits.

At nine demerits the computer in the motor vehicle branch automatically kicks out the record and the branch gives the offending driver an opportunity to show just cause why his licence should not be suspended for 30 days.

B.C. Tel Set To Battle Takeover

B.C. Tel president J. Ernest Richardson Tuesday assured shareholders the company will fight to protect their interests in the event of a takeover bid by the provincial government.

At the same tiime he released figures showing net earnings for the months ended Sept. 30 were $14.5 million, up 31 per cent from the same period in 1971.

Earnings per share are $4.62 compared with $3.52 in the same period last year.

Richardson said the company is incorporated by a special act of Parliament and "it follows, therefore, that only the Parliament at Ottawa can legislate as to the acquisition of its assets or preferred or ordinary shares."

He added: "Shareholders should have confidence that we will take every step necessary to protect their interests."

On Oct. 12 Premier Barrett repeated his campaign pledge to take over the telephone company but did not say when it would be done.

Operating revenues for the nine months were $168 million while operating expenses were $117 million. New earnings totalled $14,961,0000 compared with $10,139,000 in 1971.

Return on invested capital is 5.86 per cent compared with 5.25 per cent in 1971.

Of the $4.62 per share earnings, 36 cents per share was attributed to temporary income tax deductions.

Hydro Men Back to Work

Times News Services

MONTREAL—Striking Hydro-Quebec workers began to filter back to work today 90 minutes after the provincial legislature passed emergency legislation ordering the strikers to maintain essential services.

But thousands of people are still without power in the wake of the nine-day walkout by 8,500 hydro employees.

Under the terms of the crisis legislation, the strikers have been told to maintain essential services or face stiff fines.

About 29,000 people in the province were without power Tuesday and some firms, crimped by blackouts, were laying off employees.

One hydro spokesman said there seemed to be no problem with the return to work.

"The union seems to be calling all their people in.

"I can't tell you how many people will return to work.

"It's hard to predict across the province but we think most of our personnel here in Montreal will be on the job."

He said repair crews headed out to fix major power breaks across the province as soon as Hydro-Quebec officials called them and informed them of the legislation.

"I have not heard of any trouble and we really aren't anticipating any," he added.

The strike had forced many frustrated Montrealers either to leave their homes, rent electrical generators or just put up with the lack of electricity.

With routine power breakdowns cutting electricity for periods of more than a week, problems have ranged from invalids being trapped inside their apartments to supplies of frozen goods being ruined.

Hydro-Quebec says up to 160,000 Montrealers have been affected by the strike at various times.

In suburban Cote St. Luc where about 4,000 residents were blacked out since within minutes of the Hydro workers' walkout until 8 o'clock this morning — the usual neighborhood sounds have been augmented by the whirr of auxiliary generators.

Many other residents of the relatively affluent suburb have deserted their homes to take refuge in nearby hotels or the homes of friends.

TANKER SINKS SHIP

ATHENS (AP) — A giant Greek oil tanker, on a trial run without cargo, and a Greek Navy troop ship collided today in the Saronic Gulf. The navy ship sank and shipping sources said 46 sailors were missing. Thirteen others were rescued.

The tanker was identified as the 100,175-ton World Hero, owned by Greek shipping magnate Stavros Niarchos. The military vessel was reported to be the Merlin.

There were no reports of casualties on the tanker.

The World Hero, built in 1970 in Japan, is described in the Greek shipping directory as the biggest of Niarchos' fleet of 80 ships.

The collision occured in clear weather. The sea was calm.

Cuba Offers Hijack Talks

MIAMI (UPI) — Cuba said today it has no desire to provide a refuge for common criminals fleeing the United States and offered to work out a "broad agreement" with the U.S. government to halt airline hijackings.

The offer was made in an official government statement read over Havana radio in a broadcast monitored in Miami.

In Washington, the state department said it would seek to reopen negotiations with the Castro government on ways to stop air pirates from using Cuba as a haven.

The Cuban government conditioned its offer to previously stated demands — that the United States return Cubans who flee the island in stolen planes and ships, and that alleged sabotage and commando raids from U.S. territory cease.

"It is in the mutual interest of both countries to take steps leading to a solution of this problem," the official statement said.

Meanwhile, in Australia, police today shot and killed an airline hijacker who commandeered an Ansett Airlines Fokker Friendship plane of four in Australia's first hijacking incident.

Police said the hijacker died of his wounds at a hospital following a shootout at Alice Springs airport. They said a police constable who was wounded in the gunfight remained in serious condition.

Police said the hijacker, who remained unidentified, was gunned down after he opened fire on three policemen.

An airline stewardess held hostage by the man broke away just before the shooting erupted, police said.

A spokesman for Ansett Airlines said the man, armed with a sawed-off .22 calibre rifle, entered the flight deck as the plane made its final approach to Alice Springs airport from Adelaide.

Then, the airline said, he told the pilots he wanted a light aircraft and a parachute ready for him when the aircraft landed. He made no other demands, the spokesman said.

As the hijacker walked to the light plane, with his rifle trained on one of the stewardesses, he was jumped by a plainclothes detective who knocked the rifle from his hands, authorities said. The man broke away from the policeman and ran into the bush on the side of the runway.

The Things Travellers Carry . . .

LONDON (UPI) — Aerospace Minister Michael Heseltine told a pilots' meeting Tuesday that between July and October, British Overseas Airways Corp. staff members at London Airport found and took from passengers through anti-hijacking measures:

—19 revolvers, pistols, shotguns and rifles.

—More than 300 rounds of ammunition.

—One camel whip.

They also discovered 160 antique, replica or toy guns, he added.

SPEC URGES AUTO CURBS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society says 67 per cent of oil pollution in the oceans comes from waste automotive and industrial lubricating oil.

The Vancouver organization, in a report funded by a federal local initiatives grant, recommends curbing automotive oil pollution by building rapid transit systems in all metropolitan areas and banning all but commercial vehicles from the downtown core of cities.

Canadian Union Gets $30,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Ironworkers Union, Local 1, was awarded $30,000 damages against the International Ironworkers Union Tuesday for what British Columbia Supreme Court Justice F. C. Munroe described as "outrageous conduct" in putting the fledgling Canadian union out of business.

The Canadian union was formed in 1960 by a group who broke away from the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Ironworkers Union, Local 97.

The litigation began in 1966 when the Canadian union sued the international for damages for alleged unlawful interference.

The Canadian union lost but took its case on to the B.C. Court of Appeal.

There it won and the issue was sent back to B.C. Supreme Court for a hearing on the amount of damages to be awarded.

Mr. Justice Munroe in his decision to assess the international union referred to an agreement made in July, 1966 between Amalgamated Construction Association—a group representing contractors—and the international union.

"Under that agreement, in order to end an illegal strike, and illegal picketing, members of the construction association agreed (with the international union) under coersion and intimidation that they would not in future let out contracts or entertain bids from subcontractors who had entered into collective agreement with the plaintiff (the Canadian union) the certified bargaining agent for their ironworker employees," said the judge.

He said the Building Trades Council, representing con-

BOYS WERE BOMBS

BELFAST (CP) — British soldiers stopped two boys for questioning in West Belfast today and found themselves talking to two "human bombs."

The boys, 15 and 16, were carrying 4½ pounds of gelignite, a detonator and fuses.

They were handed over to police. Earlier, a loaded pistol and 150 rounds of ammunition were found in a school in the city's Roman Catholic Falls Road area.

Storms Batter East

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Heavy snow, freezing rain and drifting snow tormented areas from the Ohio Valley to New England today and gale warnings continued for much of the Atlantic Coast.

Strong winds lashed the lower Great Lakes and the North Atlantic coast. The New England storm moved toward Nova Scotia after leaving up to a foot of snow in some northern states.

The powerful, far-reaching storm has been blamed for at least 19 deaths since Monday as it moved toward the Atlantic. At least three other persons died in weather-related incidents in other sections of the United States.

Meanwhile, flood victims started returning to their water-soaked homes in Michigan and Ohio in the wake of a storm which lashed the shorelines of Lakes Erie, Huron and St. Clair on Tuesday.

Authorities estimated the number of evacuees at more than 10,000 along a 200-mile stretch of Lake Erie and Lake Huron shoreline extending from Ohio's Cuyahoga County west to Toledo and north to Michigan's Saginaw Bay.

In some areas curfews were in effect and National Guard troops were on duty to prevent looting.

Winds to 45 miles an hour sent waves up to 15 feet high crashing against Michigan and Ohio lakefront areas.

Heaviest Strikes Against North

Times News Services

SAIGON — The U.S. Command today reported the heaviest air strikes against North Vietnam since President Nixon cut back the air war nearly a month ago.

The B-52 raids were also the deepest into North Vietnam since last spring, the bombers striking within 20 miles of the 20th parallel limit set by Nixon to keep the bombing away from Hanoi and Haiphong during ceasefire negotiations. The parallel runs 65 miles south of Hanoi and Haiphong.

The 340 total was a record since the air war was restricted on Oct. 23. The previous high was Oct. 15 when a total of about 365 sorties were flown (a sortie is one flight by one plane). But no restrictions were on at that time.

As the latest strikes were announced, North Vietnam accused the United States of "carpet bombing" raids earlier this week that caused "many casualities to the civilian population."

U.S. Navy pilots used "walleye" radar-guided bombs to destroy three bridges near Vinh, 164 miles south of Hanoi, U.S. spokesmen said. The avowed aim of the bombing, as it has been since the air war resumed April 6, was to choke off North Vietnamese supplies flowing south.

NEWS BRIEFS

Showdown Ahead?

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — The Peronist-dominated General Labor Confederation said today it is declaring a general strike Friday so workers can welcome former dictator Juan D. Peron home after his 17-year exile. The governing military junta earlier banned all public demonstrations until further notice, thus setting the stage for a possible showdown between troops and strikers.

Flight Cancelled

MONTREAL (CP) — A strike by about 240 Nordair Ltd. employees in Quebec, Ontario and the Northwest Territories forced the airline to cancel at least one of its 30 scheduled flights today, a Nordair spokesman said.

Lofty Blaze

CHICAGO (UPI) — A spectacular fire raced through the 95th, 96th and 97th floors of the John Hancock Centre today, damaging a restaurant and forcing about 50 residents to seek the safety of lower floors. Fire Commissioner John Quinn said nobody was injured and that the fire was put out in an hour.

Warden: Let Some Drugs Into Jails

CALGARY (CP) — Society must run the risk of allowing some soft drugs to infiltrate its prisons if it wants to retain a humane penal system, says warden Pierre Jutras of the Drumheller correctional institute.

The warden, commenting on the possibility of drug abuse within institutions, said: "We are very concerned but the only way to stop it completely would be to keep the prisoners locked up for 24 hours a day with no visitors.

"When society as a whole has this problem with drugs it is bound to be reflected in our institutions, especially since more and more people are coming to prison for drug offences."

However, warden James Jackson of the Calgary correctional institute says he can't point to specific incidents of drug abuse at his institution, although he has his suspicions.

"We search the clothing of prisoners coming back from temporary absences and we warn visitors that they must not bring anything in, although we don't search them as a matter of course.

"And if we have reason to believe a person will attempt to bring in contraband we don't grant them permission to visit."

But one former prisoner, who declined to reveal his name, said he thought he wouldn't see another "joint" when he went to jail for the first time in 1966 for possession of marijuana, a four-month term at the Oakalla Prison in British Columbia.

"At Oakalla you could get anything you wanted — heroin, marijuana, hashish, LSD, MDA, anything," he said in a recent interview.

Later, he said, drug convictions resulting in a total of 31 months at Fort Saskatchewan jail and Drumheller showed Alberta's institutions shared much the same problem.

Hard drugs like heroin are rarely available, he said, "but a guy with a soft drug habit would not have to give it up because he's going to jail.

"In fact, I would say it is easy to get soft drugs like marijuana, LSD or prescription pills."

He added:

"Jail is a very boring place. You're in a state of depression all the time and drugs are a way of getting away from it all — they're a break, a holiday.

"There is a drug culture in jail — the so-called hippie-types who used drugs on the outside. They number about 20 to 30 per cent of the inmates usually. But about 80 per cent use drugs at some time during their stay no matter what they were like on the outside.

Warden Jutras said he has had about 12 cases in the last year of persons being caught possessing drugs within the institution or trying to bring them in from outside.

The contraband has always been of the "soft" kind, he said, including illegally-obtained prescription sedatives like librium as well as LSD and hashish.

"To say there is no problem is naive," he said.
